Mr. Marien was accompanied by Mrs. Adolph Klein, also of Cincinnati, whose ability as an instrumentalist is well known among her many Richmond friends.

KISSED STATUE OF JEFFERSON

A Pretty Actress of Sir Henry Irving's Company Took Compassion on a Delapidated Bust of Louisiana's Purchase.

St. Louis, March 3.—When Sir Henry Irving was playing an engagement recently at St. Louis, he and twenty members of his company visited the World's Fair grounds.

The great English actor expressed in his usual dignified manner, his amazement and admiration at the wonders achieved in the building of the great exposition, but it remained for one of the pretty women members of his company to bubble over with sentiment at the most unexpected moment. On the walk in front of the Hall of Congresses is a large staff bust of Thomas Jefferson. It has been there for months in all sorts of weather, neglected and forlorn. The massive features assumed a dilapidated and utterly dejected look that was pathetic. As the Irving party approached the neglected bust, the actress passed before it and studied its melancholy features.

"You poor, neglected old dear," she exclaimed, as she threw her arms about the bust and implanted a resounding kiss on its imitation marble lips; "you certainly deserve a better fate from the glorious World's Fair than to be out here in the damp and cold."

With that she gave the statue another resounding smack and passed on with the party. The grim, classic features of the author of the declaration of independence seemed almost to wear a smile for the first time since it was cast and those who witnessed the performance cast looks of envy on the stolid lips of the bust, where the pretty woman's salute had been impressed.

Program for the recital at First Presbyterian church has been arranged by Mrs. Antoinette Hartcorn Sullivan. 3-2t
