Joseph Jefferson, Sr., as Sir Lucius O'Trigger, in "The Rivals."

Amusements

Laughter and tears are happily mingled in Theo. Kremer's greatest play, "For Her Children's Sake," while the play is one that can not be described, yet every one can realize what a mother would do for her children's sake.

The play opens with a prologue, the scene being in Pastor Kingsley's home, Christmas eve. This is one of the strongest prologues ever written, and during the three acts that follow the interest never flags, as the story, beautiful and true to life, is interpreted by a splendid cast, including the Shedy children. Those who witnessed "The Fatal Wedding" at the Gennett theater on Christmas, which is by the same author as "For Her Children's Sake," were greatly impressed with it, and especially with little Jessie. The child parts in "For Her Children's Sake" are even stronger, and one can form some idea of its popularity by the fact that three companies are now presenting it under direction of Sullivan, Harris & Woods, than whom there is not a more convincing trio of managers. The play comes to Richmond Friday evening and will be presented at the Gennett. Wherever presented the press is enthusiastic in its praise. Don't fail to see it.

"Why Girls Leave Home" is underlined for the Gennett.

In speaking of William W. Jefferson's performance of Bob Acres in "The Rivals" at Powers' theater, Chicago, Ill., the Tribune, which is about the most conservative journal of that metropolis said: "It remains to speak of Mr. William W. Jefferson's Bob Acres. It was really a remarkable performance. Mr. Joseph Jefferson, it is said, has claimed that William once played the part and the audience never knew that it was not his father. This is rather a rash statement, but there were times last night when it almost seemed that it may be true. In face, form, gesture and occasionally voice, William Jefferson was entirely his father, and he deserves enormous credit to step so early, at his age, into his father's shoes." Joseph Jefferson, jr., will play Sir Lucius O'Trigger, the same character he has always played while touring with his father in "The Rivals." This organization, which is the same one (with a few minor exceptions) that was in support of Mr. Jefferson during the short preliminary tour this season, should prove the best that ever appeared upon the local stage. "The Rivals" will be the attraction at the Gennett Saturday, matinee and night. The supporting company includes Messrs. John Jack, Guy Combs, Percy Plunkett, James Lewis, Ffolliott Paget, Blanche Bender, Meta Greene and others, all members of the original Joseph Jefferson company.

This Fly Was Fly.
"Good morning," said the spider, adding the familiar polite invitation to step into the parlor.
"Step into your parlor?" repeated the fly, with a knowing wink. "You mean your dining room, don't you? No, thank you."—Philadelphia Press.
