MARTYR TO DUTY

St. Louis Man Expires in Honeymoon Deferred Seventeen Years.

St. Louis, July 19.—John McAvoy died while enjoying his honeymoon, for which he had worked nearly two decades.

For seventeen long, hopeful, disappointing years death foiled love in his case. Early in 1887 his school playmate, Bridget Mahoney, said she would marry him. She waited seventeen long years until Johnny was ready to wed. When he married her at the church of the visitation, Feb. 10, 1904, he was feeble. He had spent his strength supporting his brothers and a sister. They died, and John helped share the funeral expenses. He worked in a tobacco factory all the time, inhaling dust, which was the final cause of his death.

When John McAvoy married the girl he had courted for seventeen years he was a physical wreck. His physician, Dr. Marks, told him to go to a warmer climate.

"I can not pay the mortgage on my home," McAvoy replied.

"You will die if you stay here," the doctor said.

"I will work and die," McAvoy replied.

He worked on; worked in the dust and stifling heat of the factory. One day he went home. He sat in the kitchen a while and fainted. Revived, he insisted on going back to work. Mrs. McAvoy dissuaded him. He fainted again, and when the physician summoned by Mrs. McAvoy arrived, her husband was dead.

SCHUMANN-HEINK

Hopes to Cleanse Comic Opera in New Role—Busy Season Ahead.

New York, July 19.—Enthusiastic over the new comic opera in which she is to star, and apparently without regrets for her former successes in grand opera, Mme. Schumann-Heink arrived here on the Hamburg-American line steamship Hamburg. She had gone to Germany to attend the wedding of her daughter Charlotte, which took place on July 4, at Villa Tini, the diva's residence near Dresden.

"Yes, I anticipate great pleasure from my comic opera venture," said Mme. Schumann-Heink. "And why not? If one has the voice and the necessary dramatic talent, why shouldn't one be able to lift light opera to the plane of grand opera? If the music and the ensemble are good, why should I not, with my art, be able to convert the public to an appreciation of opera comique?"

"And what do you think? I'm going to play the role of a laundress." The diva laughed and shrugged her noble part. "It is not so noble a part. But it's a good, strong, characteristic role. 'Fesch' we would call it in Vienna."

Madame Schumann-Heink will be busily engaged with rehearsals. The opera will open at the Detroit opera house on September 12. She will appear at the Broadway theatre, in this city, on October 3. In the meantime she is still busy with concert engagements, as she goes to Ocean Grove on July 23, then to Milwaukee, Asbury Park and other places.

Esopus, July 20.—Mr. Mack introduced Judge Parker and Henry G. Davis, who had never met before and the two candidates talked together on the veranda. Mr. Davis declined to give an interview.

STOLEN MANTLE

The Pope Will Endeavor to Recover Precious Relic.

London, July 19.—According to a Rome dispatch the Pope has commissioned Cardinal Vannutelli, who is about to visit Ireland, to try to obtain from J. Pierpont Morgan a priceless ancient cope which was stolen in 1902 from the Cathedral of Ascoli. The cope disappeared mysteriously while repairs were being made to the cathedral, and though the government took measures for its recovery they were unsuccessful. It now appears, that the cope was sold to Mr. Morgan, who has given it to the South Kensington Museum.

This cope, or ecclesiastical mantle, is a beautiful embroidered piece of work, supposedly done in France in the thirteenth century. It was presented to Ascoli Cathedral by Nicholas IV. The entire ground is on gold thread on which were worked fifteen exquisite panels of religious subjects. One curious feature is the smallness of the hood, which is only ten inches deep. The museum authorities believe the cope is of English and not of French workmanship.

DRESS REFORM FOR MEN.

(Chicago Tribune.)
 The movement for reform in men's dress in summer has quietly died out. The much heralded shirtwaist for men flourished sporadically a few seasons and then disappeared. And where are the duck trousers and the crash suits of yesterday? Even the comfortable blue serge suit and the blue serge coat which kept company with a variegated assortment of trousers three or four years ago have lost their vogue.

Women dress sensibly in hot weather. They wear shirtwaists that the cooling winds can whistle through. Their summer skirts are light and airy. Their summer hats sit high on their heads and do not obstruct the breezes. They would not think of lugging about a heavy, hot pair of high shoes. Their husbands come perspiring after them, many of them in wool hats, most of them in heavy coats and thick trousers, and all larding the lean earth as they walk along. Many men reject the comfortable low shoe. Many others persist in wearing their vests. Those who don't wear vests strap belts around their waists without taking off their suspenders, and, as a result, are not much cooler than if they had left their vests on. Open work hoosery has been tabooed. Of the many comfortable articles of dress for men which have been introduced of late years the negligee shirt is the only one that seems to have come to stay.

The American woman is a radical in dress. She will wear anything the fashion papers tell her is the mode or is going to be, from a shirtwaist that is a mere airy pretense to heels that are a half foot high. The American man, on the other hand, is in dress, the veriest conservative. He likes old style for no reason other than they are old. The tailor can get him to submit to a slight increase in the width of his trousers legs or to a small addition to the length of his coat tail, but beyond a few such trifling changes the average American man can't be got to go.

The shirtwaist looked effeminate to him, and the American man would rather be a dog and bay at the moon than be suspected of effeminacy. Duck trouser made him feel like a fop; and the American business or professional man would rather melt with fervent heat than be taken for a fop.

So long as men remain so pertinaciously conservative in the matter of dress they will continue to have for several weeks of each year the pleasant sensations of being alternately boiled and broiled. Hadn't they better take a few lessons from their wives?

PREBLE COUNTY

Interesting Races for the County Offices in That County.

Eaton, Ohio, July 20.—The unusual activity apparent in county political circles is believed by pioneer politicians to presage one of the most interesting races for county offices yet held. In connection with the nomination for auditor, Charles Edison, the present deputy under Auditor Gale; Frank Mitchell, of New Paris, formerly president of the County Agricultural society, and William Clark, also of New Paris, are mentioned. Clinton Nelson, a civil war veteran, and formerly an instructor in the Soldiers and Sailors Orphans' Home at Xenia; James Wilson, of Casper township, and John W. Hoffman, of West Manchester, are lining up their forces for a battle royal for the office of sheriff. Charles Holley, of New Paris, William Flanders, of West Alexandria, and J. W. Jones, of Eaton, are all eager to succeed Recorder Bailey. William Morse and George Wilson, of College Corner, are the candidates announced thus far for the vacancy in the board of county commissioners created by the expiration of the second term of Charles Riekey. William Capp, of Eaton, and Job Inman, of Camden, are candidates for the office of county infirmarian director.
