Cuticura Treatment is local and constitutional—complete and perfect, pure, sweet and wholesome. For People Who Eat Hurriedly and Chew Their Food on the Way to Their Work.

You have probably noticed that there is nothing more touching than a youth with a struggling mustache.

A person may be left out in the cold here but it does not follow that such will happen in the life to come.

It is hard to find a man so deep that he has no shallow spot.

It is wrong to define gossip as idle talk. It is one of the most industrious things you ever saw.

"Why is it Indiana summer pa, This best time of that year? Where does the Indian come in? Pray tell me, father dear."

"Because men hate to waste the time At work we call it so; The noble red man never likes To go to work, you know."

"A shoemaker is running for governor of Massachusetts."

"Yes, and I'll bet everybody on the other side is claiming this will be his last run."

When a man goes home at night and finds his wife out to a card club and no signs of supper, he feels like going into the same business himself. The climax is reached, though, when his wife comes home and says: "Why George, how early you are to-night." If George had been late for supper what would she have said?

"There's nothing half so sweet in life as"—oh, no you don't—as sugar.

Some families in Richmond quit using eggs because the price was so high. Some one suggested that the high price was caused by the fact that the eggs were laid so low.

The limit was reached this morning at the Palladium office when a country girl stepped into the office carrying on her arm a basket of eggs. The stenographer thought she wanted to subscribe for the paper and bowed very profoundly to the rural maiden, accompanying the bow with the remark, "Is there anything wanted?" Yes, replied Maud Muller, I've a dozen and a half of eggs here and I'll take sugar for them." "This is a printing office," remarked the stenographer, and the rural maiden blushing backed her way out.

HEROIC FLAGMAN

At New Castle Saves a Baby at Risk Of His Own Life.

The New Castle Courier has the following to say of heroic "Buddy" McGrath the flagman at the Pennsylvania crossing at Newcastle who is known to every railroad man on the Richmond Division of the Panhandle.

"Buddy" McGrath should have a gold medal awarded him for his last bit of heroic work in saving a life at the Pennsylvania crossing on Broad street. The genial flagman has saved over twenty-five persons from instant death on this crossing and Tuesday evening about 5:30 he not only saved a three-year-old boy from being struck by a through freight but risked his own life and barely escaped being run down.

A lady, whose name could not be learned, and her young child were walking toward the railroad from the east, the little boy running on ahead of its mother and not paying any attention to the train. When the woman saw that the train was so near, and as she was too far away to rescue her child, she threw up her hands in despair, expecting to see the little boy killed. McGrath was standing half way between the L. E. and W. and Pennsylvania tracks, flagging for trains on both roads, when he saw the perilous position of the child. He ran his fastest and grabbed the cloak of the boy, swinging him off the track when the train, which was going at good speed, was but three or four feet away. "Buddy" cleared the track just in time or he would have been struck himself.

A number of people who were waiting for the 5:49 passenger train, witnessed the narrow escape and thought it hardly possible for the boy to be rescued.
