

DISTINCTIVE HOSIER EXHIBITS TO BE SHOWN

They Will Be One Feature of The State Fair.

FROM THE INDIANA SOIL.

At the Indiana State Fair, which opens at Indianapolis on September 9, the big exposition of agricultural products will be more distinctively a display of Hoosier examples of the soil than in any year since the fair was organized. The premium list for these products is extensive and, with the exception of the corn show, the competition will be confined to Indiana growers. The premiums to be awarded on grain and seeds amounts to $457, vegetables, $217; potatoes, $116; root crops, $103. In the corn show, in which Indiana growers always fare well in the distribution of prizes, the awards amount to nearly $300.

A feature of this department of the fair will be an elaborate display of about everything produced in Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma and Texas. One of the railroads of the southwest has, this summer, sent a special car through these states gathering up samples of farm products, especially in the horticultural line, and the exhibit will be at the Indiana Fair during the full five days. This display will not compete for prizes, but will be shown in the horticultural building, where the best growers of Indiana will hold their usual keen competition for ribbons. The awards on fruits at the coming fair will amount to $735.

Amusements

Vaudeville at the Phillips.

This week's bill it is believed by the management of the New Phillips, will far eclipse the one that has just closed at this house as special effort has been made to get some of the best that the circuit affords. The headliner will be Russell J. Grose, known as the handcuff monarch, who is advertised to remove shackles of private or foreign combination or time lock, handcuffs included. It is said of Grose that his act is the highest priced single act on the vaudeville stage, and he comes to the New Phillips through a special arrangement with a Chicago booking house. The public always shows great interest in an act of this kind, and it is certain that Grose will prove a real eye opener. In addition to this the bill calls for the following: Overture, Miss Grace Miller. Black and Leslie, premier comedy novelty artists.

Illustrated song, Cal Lankert. The Talcott's, eccentric singing and dancing.

Charley Gano, monologist. The Cameragraph, showing the latest motion pictures.

There will be the usual order of performances throughout the week, with a souvenir matinee on Wednesday and a special matinee for children Saturday. The performances are continuous from 7:30 to 10:15 each night. The present bill concluded with the performance of last night.

The Carl W. Cook Stock Co.

"The Mysteries of New York" was the card offered by the Carl W. Cook stock company, to the Grand patrons last night and the audience that witnessed the play gave every evidence of thoroughly enjoying it. The plot is an absorbing one and was well worked out, being a deft mixture of melodrama and comedy.

Don't Put Your Children in the Cellar

Judge Brown, judge of the famous juvenile court at Salt Lake City, who spoke at the Chautauqua recently and at the Coliseum last Thursday night during the performance of his juvenile band, said then: "In too many of the churches the parents sit in a large, well ventilated room in comfortably cushioned pews while the children are confined in a Sunday school room that is down in the cellar. Children appreciate this difference and for the church to rightfully claim their devotion they should be given a fine room like their elders have. Nothing is too good for the little ones." Judge Brown's words apply to other things pertaining to children as well as to the church. In clothing, for example, nothing should be too good for the children. They appreciate being neatly dressed and especially so at the beginning of the school year. Richmond schools commence next Monday and in the meantime every parent should consider it a duty to come in and see our fine new line of boys' and children's school suits and the reasonable prices under which they are being sold.
