PLEASANT SUMMER

Right Food the Cause.

A Wis. woman says: "I was run down and weak, troubled with nervousness and headache for the last six years. The least excitement would make me nervous and cause severe headache."

"This summer I have been eating Grape-Nuts regularly and feel better than for the six years past."

"I am not troubled with headache and nervousness, and weigh more than I ever have before in my life. I gained 5 lbs. in one week."

SQUARED ACCOUNTS.

Also Won a Reputation and Saved Himself Further Trouble.

Press agents, like other individuals, have their troubles, but there is one in Philadelphia who has fewer of them than the ordinary man. Asked one day how he managed so well to get along with everybody, he explained:

"Well, I won a reputation. You see, when a press agent is able to give a man heart disease from which he actually dies his troubles cease if persons have a proper regard for their lives. I was the press agent for a German singing fest. I naturally used the German papers."

"There was one editor who had the idea that he wasn't getting all that was due. Nevertheless he published column after column of type and pictures."

"Afterward the managers of the show received a bill for $820 for advertising. They were in a rage. 'What shall we do?' they demanded. 'Don't get excited, I cautioned 'em. I'll fix that all right!'"

"I went to the office of a friend, and, going to the type cases, I stuck the finest billhead you ever laid eyes on. I printed it in two inks. It read: 'The Two Continents Engraving Company; John Smith, manager.' Next I wrote this account. 'To Peter Jacob Schmidheiser, Dr., to cuts for German festival, $800.'"

"When Schmidheiser received the bill he fainted. He revived and sent for me."

"For vot is it you charge me for der cuts vot I could pay for 40 cents apiece, yet?" he demanded.

"That's all right, old man," I assured him. "You might buy those cuts from anybody else for 40 cents apiece, but not from me."

"He refused to pay the bill, but not long afterward he was stricken with heart disease and died. His executors found the bill, with its balance of $70 in my favor. They asked me what I'd take to settle, and I told them $50. They paid it cheerfully, and since then I haven't had any trouble."—San Francisco Chronicle.

PINEAPPLES.

A Time When They Sold For $10 Each In San Francisco.

In 1851 pineapples were rare in San Francisco. One day in that year one of the passengers who had crossed the isthmus of Darien before leaving Panama purchased from one of the natives of that place a dozen pineapples for a quarter of a dollar, and when he landed in San Francisco he had six left. He was carrying these from the landing place at the foot of Vallejo street, where there were boat steps at the end of a twenty foot wharf, which new arrivals approached by Whitehall boats from the steamer that in those days anchored in the stream 200 yards from shore. The man was accosted suddenly by a stranger who asked him what he wanted "for that lot of pineapples."

"They are not for sale."

"But I want them," said the Californian.

"I'll sell you three," said the new arrival, who on the voyage had heard that San Francisco people were liberal buyers, and he added, "but they'll cost you $5 each."

"Take 'em," was the curt reply, and the fruit changed owners, the resident passing over a Spanish coin known then as a gold "ounce," worth $16 in trade.

Before the new purchaser had moved across Battery street, where the transaction had taken place, he was accosted by an acquaintance, who asked him to let him have the fruit. A dicker followed for two of them, the acquaintance paying $10 apiece for them. Later in the day the first purchaser was boasting of the rapid manner by which he had cleared $5 and still had a fine pineapple for supper.—San Francisco Call.

Protest of the Fat Man.

"My friends," said the fat man plaintively, "moved, I suppose, by a desire to appear jocular, always comment on my weight whenever they run across me. It isn't that they note any alarming change in the number of pounds I carry about, for I have been what my tailor politely calls 'substantial' these many years. By the same token I have got so that I don't mind reflections on my size—that is, I'm not particularly sensitive about it. What does jar me, however, is the mental vacuity evidenced by the would be humorists. One comes to think that their impressions of a person don't extend beyond his avoirdupois, and the sense of fun which leads them to voice these impressions is certainly rather primitive. And this is thing," the fat man concluded.—New York Press.

Turning the Tables.

"I reckon dat nigger's chances for life is mighty good," said Brother Dickey.

"How come?"

"At Cripple Creek."

Unusually capable acting, clever mechanical effects and thrilling climaxes are features of E. J. Carpenter's "At Cripple Creek," to be presented at the Gennett Tuesday night. The name of Hal Reid the author, is too well known to local playgoers to need introduction here; suffice to say that this, his latest play, represents his best efforts. Thrills, heart throbs, sadness and gladness—all these emotions will be experienced by you who attend, and you will be the better for having been there.

"Told in the Hills."

A clever bit of comedy character acting is done by J. McIntosh Todd, a "Gent on the Road," who has a part in "As Told in the Hills," which will be at the Gennett tonight. In addition to being entirely new in plot and development, as well as characters, the play is one of the strongest from a dramatic standpoint that has been produced this season. The original company will be seen. The play is artistically staged, special attention having been given to the details of the scenery.

"A Cowboy's Girl."

Perce R. Benton's elaborate production, "A Cowboy's Girl" is the attraction at the Gennett Wednesday night. Press and public speak of the latest Benton success in the highest terms. Many new features will be introduced and a performance seldom, if ever, seen outside of New York or Chicago will be given in its entirety. The complete production including the original cast, scenery and properties down to the smallest detail will be used by this company.

"The Darling of the Gods."

To the Gennett theatre next Thursday night comes David Belasco's wonderful drama of old Japan, "The Darling of the Gods." The engagement of this phenomenally successful drama is an event of unusual importance. "The Darling of the Gods" has a record that is unique in the annals of stage successes. It has been played more than 1200 times in the United States, and will probably be played 1200 more before it is taken from the boards. In the meantime, it has been performed in England and Australia in an aggregate of 500 times, and Mr. Beerbohm Tree is seriously considering a magnificent revival of it in London.

The scenic production of "The Darling of the Gods" is recognized as an heroic accomplishment in the science of stage effects and one that will in all probability remain unequalled for several generations.

Vaudeville at the Phillips.

A new bill in vaudeville is now running at the New Phillips and will continue through the week. It is diversified in nature and should prove of interest to the lovers of vaudeville. Wednesday there will be a special souvenir matinee for the ladies, Friday night will be partly given over to the amateurs and on Saturday there will be a special matinee for the children.

THE RATTLESNAKE.

Removing Its Poison Fangs Does Not Render It Harmless.

A common misconception which is apt to lead to serious accidents is the belief that a rattler is rendered perfectly harmless, so that it can be handled with impunity, by the removal of its poison fangs. These fangs, two in number, are situated on the upper jaw and lie flat except when the serpent strikes, when they become erect and the closing of the jaws compresses the poison glands and injects the venom through minute openings in them. In striking its prey (for whatever charm the serpent may employ to get its victim within easy reach it relies upon the venom to give the coup de grace) these fangs may often be broken, and nature has provided a full supply of reserve weapons which lie dormant in the gums and which within two weeks will develop and replace the injured fang.

An acquaintance who returned from a hunting trip with twenty-five full grown rattlers in a box kept them in his office for two months confined behind a coarse meshed wire screen. He handled them most carelessly, as he had extracted the poison fangs, but when shown that each of them had developed a perfect pair of new ones there was a sudden rise in the local snake mortality. One was preserved and sent to the Bronx zoo, where it a short time afterward produced a large litter of young ones, which could have easily crawled through the screen behind which the mother had been kept. As each of them possessed the poison apparatus in full commission and was without the power to rattle, they would have been even more dangerous than adult snakes.

Professional snake handlers are often ignorant of this power to quickly replace fangs possessed by rattlers, and this ignorance led to a serious accident to one of them. He was badly bitten and narrowly escaped death, his recovery being attributed to the generous amount of whisky which was immediately administered to him, which illustrates another mistaken idea. It is a pity to shatter a pleasant illusion, but alcohol, except in very small doses, is harmful rather than beneficial as an antidote to snake bite poison.

As a matter of fact, although the symptoms of rattlesnake poisoning are most painful and alarming, an adult rarely dies from the bite of the variety common in the north. The diamond backs of the south attain a much larger size and consequently inject more venom, and their bite is proportionately more dangerous.—Francis Metcalfe in Outing Magazine.
