

SALCONISTS DISPUTE HUNDREDS OF NAMES

Three Hundred and Fifteen
Names on Blanket Remonstrance Declared Illegal.

SALOON MEN TO MAKE TEST

DECISION OF SOUTH BEND COURT
TO BE USED BY THEM IN FIGHT-ING THE REMONSTRANCE NOW IN COMMISSIONERS' HANDS.

New Castle, Ind., Jan. 7.—By declaring that 315 signatures on the blanket remonstrance, expected by the temperance forces to knock out thirteen saloons of New Castle, are illegal, the saloon men say they will prevent the passing of the remonstrance. Several hundred people gathered at the court house yesterday when the commissioners began their session. The board, however, deferred action on the remonstrance until Thursday morning, when a special session will be held. Three applications for liquor licenses are pending and will be heard at the same time the remonstrance comes up. The applicants are A. H. Ward, William Pipher and J. F. McGrath.

Among the signatures which have been declared illegal are those of some of the people who are known to be strong in the cause of temperance. Others are said to be illegal as the signers have left the city since placing their names to the remonstrance. The saloon men have taken advantage of the decision of the superior court at South Bend Saturday in a similar case. The remonstrance was filed on Friday while the saloon men filed their withdrawals on the Thursday before. The attorneys for the saloon men contend that the signatures secured on Friday are illegal as they gave the saloon men no chance to secure or attempt to secure their withdrawal. The decision in the South Bend court Saturday is said by attorneys to have supported this claim.

Will Test Case.

When the case comes up before the commissioners Thursday the saloon men will make no fight. They will merely submit their applications with the expectation of having them refused and will then appeal the cases to the circuit court for a ruling.

Unnecessary Hurry.

You have promised, let us say, to call for a friend at his office, so as to go down into the country together. He is a stockbroker, merchant, what you will. His place of business being ten minutes' walk from the station, you call after business hours, about a quarter of an hour before the train starts. You find him cheerfully doing nothing unless a signature counts for work. He politely declines to start yet. It is too late already. After five minutes you suggest departure. He no longer will move. It never takes him more than seven minutes at the utmost. Knowing his walking capacities, you doubt, but you press. At last you are off, and halfway to the train he says: "My dear old man, we must hurry up. My watch is slow." So you run—ignominiously you run. If back behind you, you just catch the moving train, and as you sink perspiring and breathless into your seat he says: "You see, we were in plenty of time. Never missed a train in my life." Plenty of time, indeed! And all this hurry for nothing. If he had been doing anything—had a letter to write or the like—in those wasted eight minutes, you could forgive him, but he hadn't, or at all events he didn't. You map your own brow and frown. He is your very good friend, remember with complacency that this "first" waiting train leads to many corner's regrets.—London Saturday Review.

A Spider's Web.

It is hard to realize how small a spider's web really is. A famous microscopist once made some interesting comparisons of a cobweb with human hair.

"I have often compared the size of the thread spun by full grown spiders with a hair of my beard," he says. "I placed the thickest part of the hair before the microscope, and, from the most accurate judgment I could form, more than two of such threads placed side by side could not equal the diameter of one such hair. If, then, we suppose such a hair to be of a round form it follows that 10,000 threads spun by the full grown spider, when taken together, will not be equal in substance to the size of a single hair. To this, if we add that 400 young spiders at the time when they begin to spin their webs are not larger than one full grown one and that each of these minute spiders possesses the same organs as the larger ones, it follows that the exceedingly small threads spun by these little creatures must be still ten times stronger and consequently that 40,000 of these minute spiders' threads cannot equal in substance the size of a single hair."

NATURE'S MYSTERIES.

And the Little That Man Really Knows About Them.

I seized the opportunity some little while ago on finding myself sitting next to a great physicist of asking him a series of fumbling questions on the subject of modern theories of matter. For an hour I stumbled like a child, supported by a strong hand, in a dim and unfamiliar world, among the mysterious essences of things. I should like to try to reproduce it here, but I have no doubt I should reproduce it all wrong. Still, it was deeply inspiring to look out into chaos, to hear the rush and motion of atoms moving in vast vortices, to learn that inside the hardest and most impenetrable of substances there was probably a feverish intensity of inner motion. I do not know that I acquired any precise knowledge, but I drank deep draughts of wonder and awe.

The great man, with his amused and weary smile, was infinitely gentle and left me, I will say, far more conscious of the beauty and the humanness of knowledge. I said something to him about the sense of power that such knowledge must give. "Ah," he said, "much of what I have told you is not proved; it is only suspected. We are very much in the dark about these things yet. Probably if a physicist of a hundred years hence could overhear me he would be amazed to think that a sensible man could make such puerile statements. Power, no, it is not that! It rather makes one realize one's feebleness in being so uncertain about things that are absolutely certain and precise in themselves. If we could but see the truth. It is much more like the apostle who said 'Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief.' The thing one wonders at is the courage of the men who dare to think they know."—Putnam's.

POWER OF WEALTH.

Money, Says a Physician, Is Able to Purchase Even Life.

The aged millionaire sighed. "I'd give all my money," he said, "if I could buy twenty-five more years of life."

"But your money has already bought you that," said the physician coldly.

"What rot are you talking now?" the millionaire asked peevishly.

"No rot at all, for it is a fact, a dreadful fact," said the physician, "that the rich live, on the average, twenty-five years longer than the poor. Born rich, you are assured of a quarter century more life than would be your allotment were you born poor. Wealth buys you all that. And yet they say that there is nothing in money. Why, man, money buys life."

"How do you mean?" said the millionaire. "This sounds rather like nonsense to me."

"Oh, wealth protects one from so many ills. Rich babies nearly always live, but poor ones die of a hundred complaints induced by poverty. Poor babies die off shockingly. And so with boys and girls, with men and women—if they are rich. They live healthily and therefore long, while if they are poor they live unhealthily, and disease, accident, contagion, privation—all sorts of preventable things—carry them off."

"Yes, money buys life, and reliable statistics show that if two children are born today, one rich and the other poor, the rich one will outlive the other by the tidy margin of twenty-five years."—Philadelphia Record.

The Origin of "Parson."

"Parson" is from the Latin "persona," a person, and the parson is the person, ecclesiastical or representative, of the church. The forms parson and person bear the same relation to each other as clerk and clerk. From being pronounced parson the word has come to be so written. Blackstone in his "Commentaries" says:

"He is called 'parson' (persona) because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented, and he is himself a body corporate in order to protect and defend the rights of the church which he represents."

"To parse a sentence" is to resolve it into its grammatical parts, and the verb is declared to have arisen from the interjection "Parse," that is, "quæ pars orationis?" (What part of speech?) used by schoolmasters.
