

PROHIBITION WAS DISCUSSED BY THE STANDARD SENATORS

Senator Tillman Urges Judiciary Committee to Hasten Report on Measure Regulating Interstate Importation.

DENOUNCES WHISKY AS ROOT OF ALL EVIL.

A Colloquy Arose Between Southern Senators as to Power of Congress to Designate Articles of Commerce

Washington, Jan. 18.—The senate committee on the judiciary took up the various prohibition measures before it and heard Senator Tillman on his bill regulating the importation of liquor into one state from another. He argued that it was competent for congress to take in hand this question and relegate it to the control of the states as a police power.

Senator Bacon asked a great many questions intended to develop the constitutional problems involved, including one which was directed towards drawing out Mr. Tillman's opinion of the difference between congress granting authority to a state to confiscate and destroy smallpox infected clothing coming into a state, and its granting the same authority to confiscate and destroy whisky. Mr. Tillman said that "as a matter of common sense" he would say that congress would not direct the destruction of the clothing, but as a "matter of law" it could authorize the state to do so. There could be no limitation on the state's police power; if it should pass laws that were drastic or silly, public opinion would deal with them, and with the law-making power. A colloquy arose between the two southern senators as to the power of congress to designate the articles of interstate commerce, and Mr. Nelson pointed out that the constitution does not define interstate commerce, but simply gives congress power to regulate it.

"Suppose," he said, "23 of the 48 states have prohibition laws and in the other 23 the manufacture and sale of liquor is permitted, have the latter 23 states the power to impress the traffic on the other 23 and can congress so legislate and the supreme court so direct?"

Replying to a question by Senator Fulton, Mr. Tillman admitted that there was some doubt of the right of congress to regulate the receipt of liquor from outside states by individuals for their own use. This, he considered the only doubtful element connected with the question.

Senator Tillman called attention to the supreme court's decision under the Wilson law, saying the constitutionality of the bill had there been sustained, and that in it the court had held that congress has the power to relinquish its control of liquor as an article of interstate commerce, and let the police power of the states attach.

He begged the committee not to delay in reporting the bill. "Get it into the senate," he urged, "and let the senate deal with it."

Asked to discuss the wisdom of the measures he declined, saying that any student of human affairs will tell you that whisky is the most potent cause of crime and misery in operation in this or any other country, and he believed it necessary to invoke the power of the federal government to perfect the regulation of the traffic in states which already have acted in that direction.

This was done by carrying the members who did not pay several months in order to protect their insurance. The amounts involved were small and the justice ruled that no appeal can be taken to a higher court.
