

COURT IS CROWDED TO HEAR THE LAST OF THE ARGUMENT

I take it, to have you infer that she had in some way contrived herself or that her testimony was not candid. But, gentlemen, I appeal from that affidavit, made in the pardonable pride of the mother, who in a stress of circumstances composed in the plenary vocabulary of the conventional lawyer written in the tumult of a trial; I appeal from that affidavit and its peculiar construction to this letter of more than 25 years ago, written in the mother's own hand, written in no one's founding phrases of a lawyer, written at a time when there was no peril, but at the peril of hereditarily. I appeal from that affidavit to this letter which comes flatteringly across a span of 25 years from the hands of a tottering old man of 79, like a benediction out of the past to interpose itself to save this boy.

Boundaries of Sanity.

Mr. Littleton told of the delicate line that sometimes separates the sound from the unsound mind, and declared that every man has the right that may some day break his heart—that some day might send his brain crashing toward insanity. These school days a father, Mr. Littleton traced his travels through Europe with his parents as a young man, and told again the incidents that the foreign physicians testified to.

"The coming of these physicians was met with the usual sneers and insinuations of the district attorney that they might be charlatans or shysters," said Mr. Littleton, "but when they appeared before you there came not a word to question their standing and reputation. Every witness we have produced has been answered by a sneer or an insinuation, but in no other way. But sneers and insinuations don't meet the requirements of the law, which demands evidence and proof."

Mr. Littleton also alluded to the testimony of the coroner's jury, men who saw Thaw at the inquest the day following the tragedy, and who swore Thaw was irrational. Mr. Jerome attempted to abuse or terrify some of these, but failed, commented the advocates.

Referring to the expert witnesses Mr. Littleton said they were giving the jury the benefit of their medical study, but had no more facts than the jury itself to judge from.

"Mr. Jerome probably will say there is no sense in expert testimony," he continued. "This will be because he has none willing to go on the stand and say this defendant was sane. Last year I wonder if Mr. Jerome did not show them the hypothetical question, and I wonder if they did not reply, 'We can swear to a whole lot, but if those things are true we can't swear Thaw was sane.' But when Dr. Evans was on the stand again we have the answer. 'You said last year it was a brainstorm.' That's all. Does that prove anything? Did that establish any fact? No, it was a play, but it landed nowhere except in the gallery. Mr. Jerome, please remember, is committed to expert testimony. He is an expert himself."

Warned Against Jerome.
"The district attorney will tell you he demanded the 14 letters Stanford White wrote to Evelyn Nesbit in Europe and they did not appear. Is that proof? That is all he has to offer. Please ask the district attorney when he talks about those letters how on earth they could throw any light on the sanity or insanity of this defendant. Keep that issue clearly in your minds, gentlemen of the jury, and demand the proof of the district attorney that the law says he must produce to remove all reasonable doubt as to the sanity of the young man before you."

"Gentlemen, I cannot conceive no circumstances, I can cherish no thought but that your verdict will be that Harry Thaw was not guilty—and not responsible for his conduct on the night of June 25, 1906. With every confidence in you, I leave his destiny for life or death in your hands."
