HONOR TO LINCOLN

One Hundredth Anniversary of His Birth to Be Observed in New York.

PROMINENT MEN TO AID.

New York, Oct. 10.—New York City is preparing for a celebration of the 100th anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, February 12, 1909.

A committee has recently been appointed to take charge of the preliminary arrangements. This committee will meet in the city hall, on October 8, when Joseph H. Choate, will be elected chairman. Special Sessions Justice Franklin Chase White is secretary of the committee, and Tax Commissioner U. Hastings is vice president.

The committee has 184 members.

Mr. Choate is trying to induce Secretary of State Elihu Root to deliver an oration at the celebration. Mayor McClellan yesterday a letter from President Roosevelt received regretting he cannot join in the celebration, as he has an engagement to deliver an address on the anniversary at Lincoln's birthplace in Kentucky. Senator Thomas C. Platt has declined membership in the committee on account of ill health.

Many prominent men have accepted.

There is talk of a popular subscription for a monument to Lincoln to cost about $200,000.

EARLY MORNING

STAR ATTRACTS

Being Viewed by Hundreds of People.

A star of particular brilliancy that becomes visible at about 5 o'clock in the morning just now, is being viewed by hundreds of spectators in this vicinity each morning. "The star in the east" as it is called, is of remarkable luminosity and appears hanging in the heavens as an immense searchlight far removed from the powers of any current or batteries. Many thin glad figures may be seen at the windows of their residences each morning, and all are gazing eastward in the effort to penetrate the hazy darkness to see the beautiful star. It is claimed by those who have seen the star at about this time for many years, that this year it appears unusually brilliant.

MASHES THREE FINGERS.

Hagerstown, Ind., Oct. 10.—Samuel Sierdorfer, the newly elected superintendent of the municipal power plant while engaged in pumping the gas well that runs the plant's engines, had the misfortune to mash three of his fingers, requiring the services of a physician. It is thought that it will not be necessary to have them amputated.

Deaths and Funerals.

George Bailey Not Likely to Return

Police Believe Shrewd Fraud Artist Will Stay Away.

The police are of the opinion that George Bailey will not attempt to return to the city in the near future. Bailey is a fugitive from justice, being charged with obtaining money by fraud. He passed a worthless check on a local grocery store and escaped with the cash given him in change. It was his first offense in this city, but there is suspicion about headquarters that he was rather wise to his game and may have had previous experience to make him so expert.

MUCH SUFFERING FROM POVERTY

Queen Alexandria Touched By Conditions in London.

CHURCHILL IS ACTIVE.

COMPLETES SCHEME FOR FORMING PERMANENT BOARD OF ARBITRATION TO SETTLE INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES.

BY RICHARD ABERCORN.

London, Oct. 10.—Grim stories of the most terrible poverty in London have been told in the daily papers during the last few days and these tales are so shocking that Queen Alexandra has sent a stirring personal appeal to many persons of wealth here to come to the assistance of the sufferers. At Bethnal Green in the heart of East End, where recounts some particulars of the awful struggle with gnawing hunger which a poor workman out of employment and his wife had waged for many weary weeks.

The husband, George Hammerley, had died suddenly when a weakened blood vessel in his brain burst just as he was handing over to one of the children the last coins in the house that a cup of hot tea might be ready for the mother in the street. The little one was told to get a cent's worth of tea, a cent's worth of sugar and a cent's worth of milk. Thus the last money went.

The widow asked the coroner to help her that her husband's body might not be buried in the potter's field, and was given $2.50 with the instruction that she must use it for food for herself and the children. For weeks the family had lived on $1.75 a week, of which $1.25 was spent for rent, leaving 50 cents for the support of a family of seven.

Michael O'Leary, a laborer, was arrested for taking a piece of bacon when his wife and three children were starving and had not tasted food, for four days. The police corroborated his story and the magistrate moved to tears, said he could not pass sentence upon him. At Workington the poverty is so great that several babies died because their starving mothers were unable to suckle them.

Mr. Winston Churchill the president of the board of trade, which of late years has been an important factor toward conciliation in industrial disputes, has completed a scheme for appointing a permanent court of arbitration, court of arbitration which he hopes will have the effect of making popular the existing conciliation act. The standing court of arbitration which will sit wherever required will be composed of three or five members, according to the wishes of the parties and will be nominated by the board of trade from three panels.

The first panel, of chairman, will comprise men of recognized eminence and known impartiality.

The second will be formed of persons, who, while preserving an impartial mind, are nevertheless drawn from the class of workmen and trade unionists. In order that the peculiar conditions of any trade may be fully explained to the court, technical assessors may be appointed by the board of trade at the request of the court or the parties to assist in the deliberations but without any right to vote.

The question of how to meet German industrial competition was taken up by Lord Rosebery in a speech the other day when he said: "Most of us know how large a number of trained specialists are employed by German commercial firms. They excel with new inventions, they adapt and development to the purposes of their business, and I understand that firms in Germany combine to keep a staff of these specialists, sharing the result of their labors, and sharing also in the cost of their support."

We hear a great deal of the encroachment of Germany in regard to our trade, but when we do hear of these complaints it may be worth our while to inquire whether the employment of these specialists has not something to do with the advantages that Germany has in commerce and whether it would not be worth our while to utilize still more the services of such men. "If the employers of Great Britain find they get on well without them, I have nothing more to say, but if they think or learn differently and should take a page out of the German book, they will find that our colleges turn out plenty of men who would gladly cooperate with them and who are looking for just such an opportunity.

Lieutenant Colonel R. G. T. Bright, who has just returned from a twenty-months' journey into darkest Africa that in the dense forests along the banks of the river Semliki, he met a pigmy tribe, the people of which were cannibals, who went pressed for food eat children.

They refuse to eat their own children, however, and therefore exchange them for those of other families.

The advance of the vegetarian movement is strikingly shown by the fact that a number of cooks from large West End houses are among the pupils of the London Vegetarian Association's Cooking School, which has just opened its doors for the fall session.

"Many of the leaders of society are ardent vegetarians," said the secretary of the association, "and vegetarianism is rapidly spreading. The Duchess of Portland is very enthusiastic, and others in our ranks are Lady Gwendolyn Herbert, Gen. Sir Alfred and Lady Turner, Lady Dodsworth, Lady Charles Beresford and Lady Fitzgerald."

The Duchess of Portland has vegetarian dishes specially served her. Lady Fitzgerald was so dissatisfied with the way in which her vegetarian diet was cooked that she came to take lessons herself.

The most strenuous opponents to vegetarian are the cooks who will rather lose their places than take lessons in vegetarian cooking.

CARRIED OPEN KNIFE IN HAND

Some Doubt as to Lewis's Mental Condition.

Halley Lewis, colored, had on "one of them fightin' drunks" as Night Sergeant Winters calls them, last night and was arrested at Sixth and South A. streets by Officer Longman and Roundsman McNally. Lewis was seeking trouble. He carried a knife open in his hand and stopped a number of persons, but did nothing to any other than molest them. The officers were in doubt as to whether his condition was altogether due to the use of intoxicants or partly due to mental disorder. He is slated as drunk.

MADAME SPECTATOR'S OBSERVATIONS

By Catherine Allman

By Catherine Allman.

The artist's life of gay bohemianism possesses a mighty attractive glamor for untried gluttons used to three square meals a day with fixins'. Two girls of my acquaintance, possessing just enough of the divine fire to be useless around home, burned and pined to have a 'tenth story studio in New York. Their parents, with the wisdom that comes with years, decided to let them have their hearts' desire. The girls packed their suit cases full of sheet music, sofa cushions and silk Japanese kimono and set forth to capture fame and fortune.

For a while, so long in fact as their fathers regularly sent fat monthly checks, everything was just too cute, and they wrote home glowing accounts of 'studio life' of their 'professions', theatricals, etc. But in time their parents arrived at the conclusion that all that outlay for art should bring in some return, and that the young women should acquire self-reliance. So the girls received curt notes that their allowances would be cut off for a while, in order that they might try out the market value of their genius.

For a few weeks the would-be artists bravely stuck it out without a murmur, but poverty proved too much at last and two meek little notes came home.

"Dear Daddy," each one read. "New York people don't seem to appreciate our stuff, and Bohemia is not all that we thought. We haven't made any fudge or ridden on the street cars or had a square meal for a week. Inadequate, we're so pizen poor we have to chase down the water-bugs in our flat and take the crumbs away from 'em."

I don't know anything more solemn than a wedding unless it's a funeral. The wedding march from Lohengrin sounds like a dirge, the flowers look waxy and smell like an undertaker's shop, and brides always wear white and generally look whiter than the clothes they wear. By the time the minister lifts up his sepulchral voice and relatives begin sniffling, I am almost ready to pass around to take a last look at the remains. I attended one wedding just like that last week and that horrid glumness began to grip me as soon as the music struck up and the bridal party began to descend the stairs. Everybody else looked just like I felt until the solemnity was broken by a shrill, childish voice, piping up as the bride came into view:

"Oh, oh, just look; here comes Aunt Jo, and her looks just like a lady."

The Mrs. Malaprops, God bless 'em, are always with us and occasionally furnish their share of human comedy. One of these well-meaning creatures, upon whom Dame Fortune had lavished more money than culture, sailed up to De Koven at a musicale.

"Oh, do you know, Mr. De Koven," she burst forth, "I adore your music. It's so full of sentiment and charm. I am going to get a piano player. Would you advise me to purchase an angelus or a pergoletti?" she asked amid a suppressed titter from her over-hearers.

The composer was too courteous to show even a twing of fun at this artless mixing up of music and architecture.

"Madame," he replied gravely, "I hesitate to advise you, but I should say it depends upon the air you prefer."

Ever and anon walls go up from society leaders about the scarcity of the drop of society males and of the delinquencies of the almost extinct species of dancing men. Gentlemen of leisure accept invitations to balls with alacrity, but they have a nasty habit of choosing a few partners for a few numbers and then spending the rest of the evening in the smoking room, telling jokes and partaking of spirituous liquors.

There was one certain coterie of men noted for this trick, and there was one certain determined hostess who set her face against the practice. At the height of a large ball at her home, a footman handed a little note to each of this group of social parasites, sequestered as usual in the smoking room. Each man read his little billet doux and each sneaked quietly back to the ball room. One of the notes fluttered to the floor, and its text ran as follows:

"Dear Mr. So-and-So: Mrs. Smith-Jones, like England, expects every man to do his duty."

Putting on mourning is a serious matter, not to put it flippantly but from the standpoint of etiquette and social conventions. There is a certain period in which the weeper must swathe herself in heaviest black crepe veils and the most sombre habiliments of woe. There are so many weeks the afflicted one must wear the veil of prescribed length and so many weeks she must be shrouded in crepe before even the sheer white cuffs and collar may tell to the world that grief as well as joy is fleeting.

Query editors on women's pages receive quantities of letters on this subject. One distressed widow wrote in quavering chirography to ask if it would be permissible to use perfume in the second mourning stage, "provided one used lavender scent." There was another query from an anxious widow just bereaved who wanted full particulars about what to wear and how long to wear it. In some way her communication was overlooked and remained unanswered for several months.

With a stricken conscience the query editor wrote out an exhaustive thesis on the subject, based on fashion's latest dictates, even going into her own purse for the extra flap the weighty answer required. Here is the reply she received:

"Thank you for the information, but I don't
