An Object Lesson.

One of the best examples of successful modern dairying and one of the most instructive is the experience of Charles Foss of Illinois. He increased the income of his ninety-acre farm from $1,000 to well over $2,000 and believes that he can double the income again along the same lines. The best of it is that his methods would seem to apply in almost any dairy section. Probably his own explanation of his success is the best.

He says, "This improvement has come about by weighing and testing the milk, by selling the low producers, buying and raising better cows, using the silo and feeding a more nearly balanced ration, and by studying and supplying the individual needs of the cow."

Value of Sheep.

Sheep improve the land where they feed. This is quickly summed up in the old saying, "The hoof of the sheep is golden." They live on weeds and other odd kinds of forage that other stock will leave. There is actually more feed for cows in a pasture where a few sheep run than there would be without the sheep, because the sheep destroy bushes that crowd and shade the grass and because sheep eat what cows do not care for. A few sheep are profitable on any farm. A good many sheep are profitable on some farms. Much depends on the farmer.

"So your son is now a soldier, hey, Uncle Ben?" "Yes, sah; he's done lined de malicious corpse, sah."—Baltimore American.
