OLD RESIDENT DEAD

Mrs. Catherine Drischel of Cambridge City Passes Away Yesterday.

PIONEER OF THE COUNTY

Cambridge City, Ind., Jan. 7.—Mrs. Catherine Drischel, widow of the late Andrew Drischel, died at her home in this city Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. Mrs. Drischel was an old resident of this city. She was born in Germany in 1832. She came to America in 1851, coming directly to Cambridge City. She was married to Andrew Drischel, September 13, 1858. Mrs. Drischel died the fifth day of last March. Had he lived until last September they would have celebrated their fiftieth anniversary. The funeral will occur from the family residence Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Rev. R. D. Hawley of the Presbyterian church will have charge of the service. Interment at Riverside cemetery.

INSTALLATION JOINTLY HELD

Ceremonies by Cambridge City G. A. R. and W. R. C.

Cambridge City, Ind., Jan. 7.—The joint installation of the officers of the G. A. R. and the W. R. C. of this city, occurred Tuesday evening, at the G. A. R. Hall. Richard R. Tyner of Knightstown, was the installing officer for the post, and Mrs. William Medsker of this city, did the work for the Relief Corps. The installation was followed by a social hour. Refreshments were served and a good time enjoyed by all.

"I'm afraid you're not tall enough for a nurse," said the mistress interviewing an undersized applicant at the registry office.

"Oh, yes, ma'am," replied the girl. "It's all the better that I'm short. The children don't drop so far when they fall."—London News.

HORSE SHOW FASHIONS

The Sheath Stocking Shocks a Few Fortunate Beholders.

DU MAURIER HAT EFFECTS.

New York Belles Wear Beauty Spots Revived From Marie Antoinette's Day—Semi-empire-directoire Modes Reign Supreme at the Garden.

My Dear Elsa—So you thought the horse show wasn't worth coming on for this year? Dick wrote you there'd be another "social frost," did he? Well, there were many such Richmonds in the field with like dolorous prognostications, but I counted upon your sporting blood making you risk a fighting chance. As usual, all signs failed, for Society, spelled with a big S, took the bit in its mouth and bolted for Madison Square Garden in fine form. Horay? Yes, dear, but then you know I've been inhaling tanbark, dreaming hackneys, cobs, roadsters and jumpers for five blissful days, and they've got on my vocabulary. But it was great to see the old enthusiasm displayed once more, not only in the ring, but among the crowds around the oval, in the boxes and the seats. One met during the week at the show every one one knew and a few hundreds one didn't. Now, Calamity Jane's character I loath to personate, but, my dear, there are rumors that the last bugle has been blown for entries in the ring—the old Garden's for sale—and the swan song of the national horse show in its present quarters hung. Aren't you sorry you missed the music?

The decorations were charming this year. American flags draped the walls near the ceiling, and below these patriotic emblems were festoons of white cloth caught up with rosettes of hunting pink alternating with branches of autumn leaves. I never liked the old trimmings of yellow and black, did you? They made me feel like a spectator at a Princeton football game with the gridiron and the yells left out. And, speaking of lifting up ones voice, there was deafening applause when Mrs. Watson Thursday afternoon drove her celebrated team, Lady Baltimore and Maryland, in the mail phaeton class to victory and another blue ribbon. The band played "Dixie" and "Maryland, My Maryland," and as this, you know, is my native state the compliment seemed partly mine.

I was convinced that things were as they should be, for my spine shivered, and this is a psychological fact that one's artistic temperament is all right. If you don't get the shivers when you listen to beautiful or inspiring music or read a lovely poem or look at a superb painting or a superb equine specimen the gates of art are closed to you forever.

Did I get the shivers over the clothes, you ask?

I did, my dear; I did. Indeed, I might enlarge upon the statement and say I got a shock when gazing at a stunning creature artistically holding up her trailing sheath skirt and displaying thereby a sheath stocking. No, it's not a joke. Sheath hosiery's the latest from Paris, and this girl was a pioneer. I have learned since that these unique foot coverings are slit up in front as well as at the sides. The open space is two inches wide at the top and graduated to a quarter of an inch at the foot, laced with a half inch black ribbon. This ribbon is finished with a large flat bow at the top. Shocking, positively shocking, eh?

Should you ask me to make a summary of the dress situation at the show I would say—leading color, dull amethyst, fur, white fox, flower, gardenia. Unsatisfactory? Well, to be more explicit the gowns for the most part were in dark colors both in the afternoon and evening. Of course you know that in the morning nothing but the strictly tailored cloth suit is ever permissible. But the dark frocks had nothing of gloom about them, for numberless rows of buttons embroidered, jeweled and bedizened in various ways gave a festive touch. But these same buttons contributed a comedy part to some very remarkable costumes worn by women with right modish ideas gone horribly wrong. Yes, indeed, the horse show proved conclusively to my mind that the semi-empire-directoire period has "arrived." Hipless coats and gowns were numerous on the promenade, and, although many of the gowns were elaborate creations, few of them could be called beautiful. Still, all represented an enormous lot of money.

There were grotesque attempts of the picturesque and classic gown to be seen, and when seen one was filled with the pharisaical sentiment, "Thank God, I am not one of them," and a feeling of gratitude for directoire styles and the biggest of hats stole over one. And that is saying a whole lot for the hats. Despite the "latest" information from over the water" predicting the small chapeau, one saw nothing of this chic thing at the Garden last week. Hats so huge were the rule that they sat all over the head and nestled confidently on the shoulders of the wearers. The Russian turban was very much in evidence, and Mrs. Reggie Vanderbilt one afternoon appeared in a Persian lamb turban so large that it almost hid her pliant face. These Du Maurier hat effects, shadowing the face as they do, are really gawky affairs. That day she wore a directoire coat of the same dark fur over a white broadcloth frock, one of the few light costumes seen in the boxes. But the funniest things of all were the beauty spots on their faces. These spots have come in with the other French fashions and are, as you know, revived from Marie Antoinette's time. The twentieth century girls call them the "telegraphy of the face," and they are placed to emphasize a good point—mouth, forehead, dimple or what you are fortunate enough to possess in the way of facial loveliness.

You know, Mrs. Van S. always goes a style one better. She has a mole on her face that has always been the pride of her life, so when the patch became the thing this lady simply enlarged upon her mole and left the court plaster, or velvet beauty spot, severely alone.

Saturday after the show our "bunch" were having tea at Sherry's, with Mrs. Van S. as chaperon. While sitting at table a drop of water from some flowers that were handed to her fell upon her cheek. She took out her handkerchief and daintily wiped the spot. But, alas, forgetting the enlarged mole, she wiped it off, too, and gave away the secret of its origin. A few minutes later she excused herself and returned with the mole once more in its original shape and size—that is to say, the original size it had been painted. Moral—Stick to the old time method. Ever most sincerely yours, MABEL.

Chartreuse of Chicken.
Chop enough chicken to fill a cup twice, add half a cup of lean ham, chopped, and half a cup of bread-crumbs taken from the center of a stale loaf, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, juice of half a lemon, two tablespoonfuls of capers and a cucumber pickle, chopped fine, salt and paprika to taste, two eggs, beaten until well mixed, and about a cup of well seasoned and flavored soup stock. When well mixed press the mixture into a well buttered melon mold, leaving an open space at the top, as the mixture will rise in cooking. Cook nearly one hour, setting in a pan of hot water in the oven or steaming in a kettle. When done turn from the mold and surround with hot string beans or peas, cooked and dressed with salt, pepper and butter. To serve cold cut in thin slices.
