ROOSEVELT EXPOSED

OF HOUSE A BLOW

AT CANNON RULES

nonism, which has become a designation for the stifling of all public-spirited legislation, for the promotion through legislation of all manner of schemes to exploit the American people for the benefit of a few greedy and corrupting combinations, and for the control of public affairs against the interest of the public was bound to bring discredit upon all participating in its operation.

The president raised the present issue between the house and himself, not alone because the action of the house had resulted to the benefit of criminals but because the particular case which he seized upon was the most available for bringing forcibly to public attention the iniquitous character of present house control.

Exposure No Accident.

It was no accident which caused the president to publish as part of his message, a letter to Speaker Cannon, chiefly relating to the attempt by the house leaders to destroy the efficacy of the interstate commerce commission and the interstate commerce law by depriving the commission of money absolutely needed to carry out the most important features of the law.

At the time the letter was written the evil planned by the house leaders against the interstate commerce commission and in favor of the law defining transportation corporations, so overshadowed in importance the determination to protect land and timber thieves by crippling the secret service that the president was far more wrought up by the former than the latter.

His interference and the fight made by the independent membership of the house under the leadership of Representative Townsend of Michigan, however, prevented the public outrage which had been planned in the proposed crippling of the commission. But the leaders had their way in respect to the secret service.

Revolution Impending.

If the read truths of the president's message are understood by the public if the full significance of his discussion of house methods and house purposes is appreciated and the full shame of the exposure he has made duly impresses itself upon the public mind, there should be a revolution of the political methods revealed in the present house organization.

Some of the house republicans are not sore on the president. They realize that the house is entirely to blame. They intend to make a fight for revision of the house rules so that control by Cannon and Tawney and the other blues, which has brought about

A glance over the records showed four convictions against Donlin and the prosecutor did not care to turn back any further. John plead guilty to public intoxication and was fined $30 and costs and given thirty days besides. He will remain in the bastile for ninety days. He will be out with the spring beauties next May.
