TO REFORM SCHOOL

Young Harvey Davis Will Be Returned to That Institution.

SETTLES BOY RELEASED

Harvey Davis, who has confessed to the robbery of the Alfred Underhill clothing store, will be returned to the reform school at Plainfield immediately, it is said. An officer from that institution was sent for and will probably arrive tomorrow to take the boy back with him. Davis was released from Plainfield about a year ago on parole. The police have made no other arrests in connection with the robbery but they are working on several clues and assert that they are gradually rounding up the gang of culprits. The robbery of Leo Fife's drug store remains a mystery and the police are still in the dark in regard to that matter.

It was stated in the Palladium yesterday that Charles Settles, the young boy who was arrested yesterday believed to have been implicated in the Underhill robbery on East Main street last Saturday night, had admitted his guilt and confessed to the theft. Such a report was erroneous however. Young Settles stoutly maintained his innocence at all times and this morning he was released from custody. The boy has always borne an excellent reputation in this community and was able to prove a complete alibi.

Leaving Convict Labor.

The convict lease system is a bad heritage. There may have been a time when no other provision was feasible, but that time has now passed, and the southern states show excellent judgment in working toward ending the system. It is probably wiser to effect this gradually, as in the Florida case, than it would be to attempt a radical step at great cost and against great opposition. Georgia has reformed its convict system, but has not yet done away with the chain gangs, though the convicts are no longer farmed out as before—a reform which was effected perhaps much by the disclosure of the frauds inflicted on the state as by consideration for the prisoners. The scheme of leasing convicts from the state and then subletting them at a handsome margin of profit made a large scandal in Georgia and cost several political and business reputations. —Boston Advertiser.

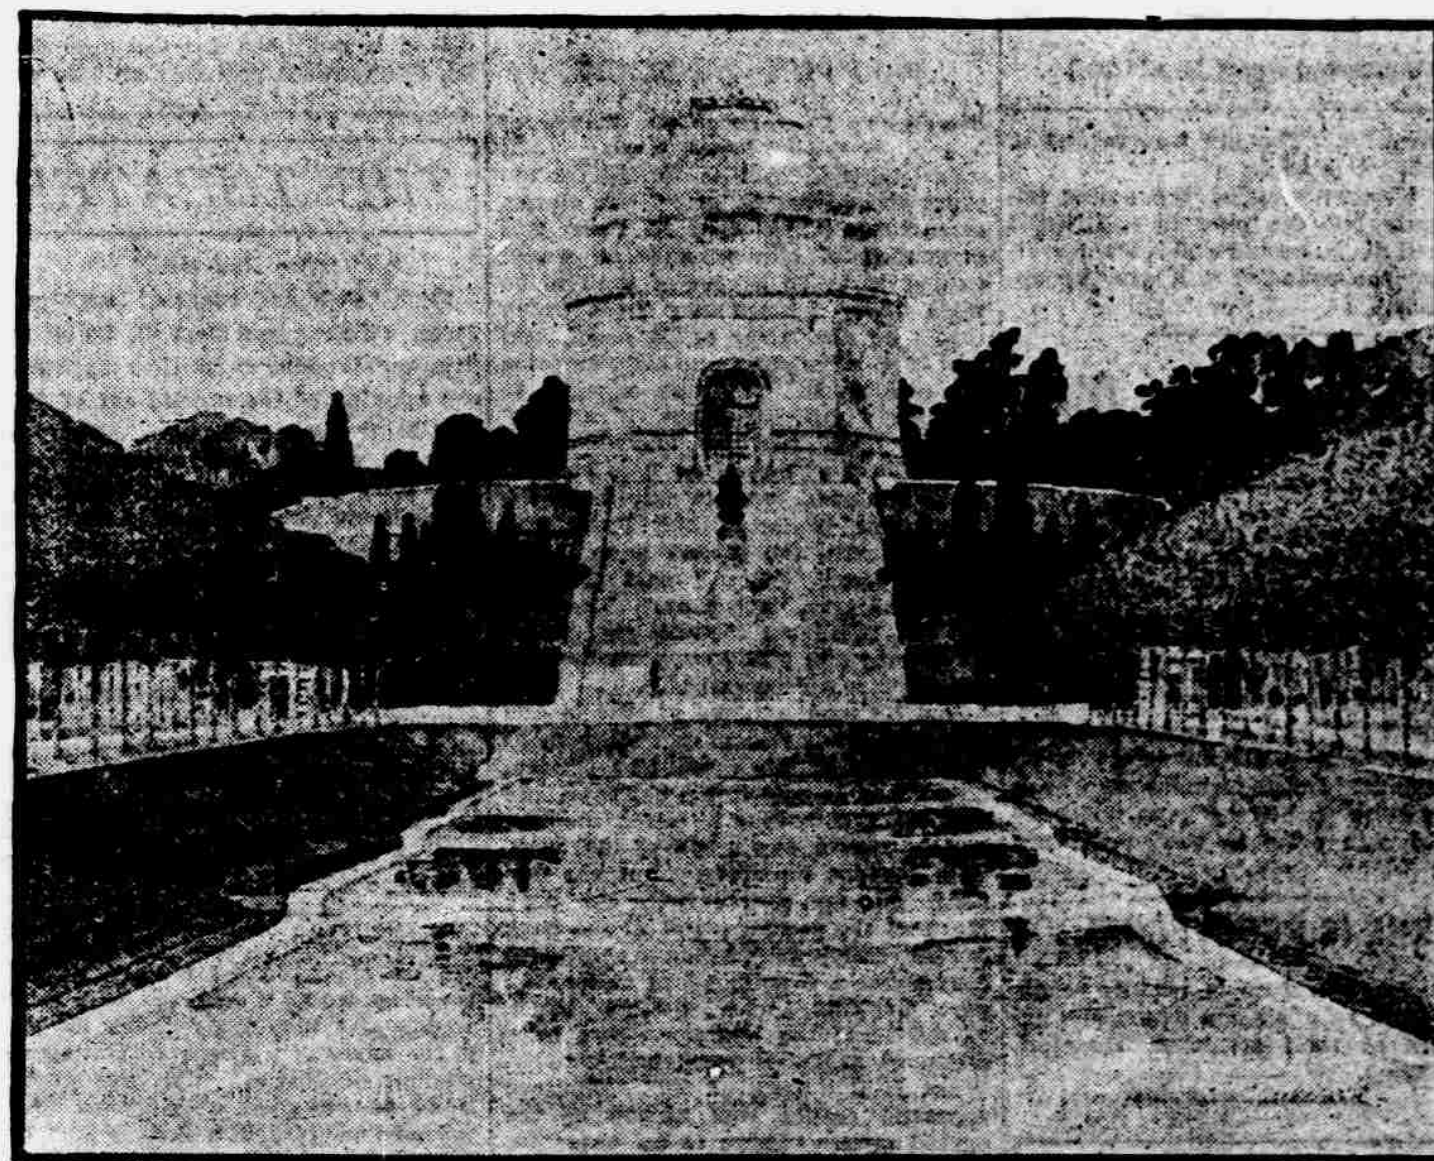

Unfair Methods Squelched.

EDUCATING MINERS.

Lehigh Company's Experimental School a Success.

General Manager S. D. Warriner of the Lehigh Valley Coal company of Wilkesbarre, Pa., says that the experimental school for miners, established just a year ago by the company at Lost Creek, has been so successful that the company is preparing to open schools in other places. The school was established by the Lehigh Valley Coal company for the benefit of all classes of its employees, from foreman down to doorboys and slate pickers. There are hundreds of these employees who have had the ambition, but not the means, to acquire the training of a mining engineer. For them a course at college is out of the question. The new school, with a regular instructor and with the aid of a correspondence course, is designed to take the place so far as possible of a college training.

It is in line with the scheme recommended by the committee of foreign experts who came to this country last year to study conditions in the mines. A building formerly used for offices was converted into a schoolhouse. Desks and chairs were put in, maps and pictures were hung on the walls, and periodicals devoted to mining subjects were subscribed for. The total number of mine workers enrolled was divided into two sections, each of which met at stated times in the evenings. In addition to the instructor employed by the company, several mining experts came to the school upon invitation and delivered lectures.

A strict record of the performances in the school is kept and is forwarded every month to the general manager of the company. In this way the management is enabled to know which of its employees deserve promotion. The man who shows the most zeal and ability in the school is most apt to win his way to a position of responsibility.

It is probable that the success of the Lost Creek school will lead to the establishment elsewhere of other institutions of the same kind. In his official report
