THE NEW CORSET CLASP.

A Tongue or Clip Which Acts as a Safety Guard.

An invention of interest to women is the new corset clasp here shown, which is designed to add much to the comfort of the user. These clasps are so shaped that when a corset provided with them is fastened on the wearer they incline slightly outward from about the waist line to the top of the corset, and because of this outward inclination the steel cannot press uncomfortably against the wearer. In some makes of corsets this fault of inward pressure is so pronounced that it causes real suffering, and the after effects are sometimes serious. It frequently happens that corsets after they have been worn only slightly develop this fault and have to be discarded. In this new design, on the left hand clasp on the inner edge, near the top, is a little tongue or clip that acts as a locking means and prevents the clasps when hooked from coming unfastened, which is another annoying feature of many of the old style clasps.

Kindheart—So your father's ill and can't work? It's very hard to have the breadwinner ill. The Kid—Yes, sir, but it might 'a' been worse. It might 'a' been mother, an' she's better 'an' 'cheese an' meat an' 'aters an' coal an' boots an' clothes an' rent win'er all in one."

which will be hung small pennants in the festival colors.

The flower committee at its meeting last night practically completed arrangements for the amateur and professional exhibit, which will probably be shown at the Knights of Pythias hall, South Eighth street. Whatever hall is selected, it will be as effectively embellished with festival colors as possible.

LIFE IS A FAIRY TALE.

Everyday Occurrences Regarded in a New Light.

Some people claim that we ought not to tell children fairy tales. Perhaps we ought not. But what else is life there? Isn't it a fairy tale, this living from day to day, this struggle for fame and power and glory? Isn't it a fairy tale to suppose that one man has it within his power to be happier than another? Could anybody but a fairy bring peace to grow-up children who are wet with sweat of work and worry?

Fairy tales there are in abundance—only they are not couched in the fantastic lines of dreams. Goblins are everywhere—and hobgoblins; imaginary bean stalks to be climbed by daring Jacks and giants to be slain by giant killers. It is all a fairyland when you come to think about it—every good woman a princess, every tired shopgirl a lovely Cinderella; the white streets of ambition standing caparisoned, ready to be mounted by knights and couriers; ships laden with their wealth coming into silver ports from odorous oceans; caravansaries with the fruit of a thousand looms trailing across the plains to the castles; moats in which flow molten gold and drawbridges which one can only cross by whispering the secret word "Success." It is all a fairyland. Flowers bloom upon every wall, the mystic music of the unseen menses, seraphs bathing in the summer seas, cherubs romping through a tangled wilderness of blooms and blossoms—oh, it is a fairy world, all right, if it is anything.

Why American Girls Marry Abroad. Tired men fill our vaudeville theaters—for there at least the audience is largely masculine—even in the daytime. They are too near exhaustion to do more than listen to wit quite easy of comprehension.

Our girls are accustomed to amusing tired men. That joy of being amused, of being interested by a man of the world, is not to be omitted in any just weighing of the question of why they find foreigners attractive, and as time passes, in spite of all the bitter disillusionments of the past, our rich girls will make more and more unflattering selections from among suitors from across the seas. And it is full time our young men awakened to their own share in the causes which lead to such a condition. The whole social system of England and of Europe generally spares a girl from such shameful sales. The mothers, the fathers, the men about her, are equipped to protect her, and they take the time and spare the energy to do so. Justly considered, it is a social, psychic question, quite apart from a man's commercial value in the world.
