

MARSHALL LOOMS UP BRILLIANTLY; JOHNSON IS DEAD

Elimination of Most Probable Selection of Democratic Party for President Boost To Thomas R.

INDIANA GOVERNOR NOW IN LIMELIGHT

Loss of the Minnesota Executive Was Crushing Blow to The Party Which Has Divorced Bryan.

(Palladium Special) Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 22.—No sooner had Governor Johnson, of Minnesota, passed away than the political prophets over the country began making their comments on the effect this would have on the next democratic nomination for president, and the name of Governor Marshall seems to loom up more prominent than ever in this connection. It seems to have been generally believed that Governor Johnson was the most formidable man the democrats had in their party for a presidential candidate. He was regarded as one of the biggest men in the party—next to Bryan probably the strongest. His death has removed the man on whom the bulk of the party seems to have relied to lead it out of the wilderness into which Bryan led it, and it is now a question that is being discussed whether the democrats have another man who can do what Johnson might have done for them.

Discussion of Future.
This discussion of the possibilities of the future is especially interesting, of course, to the democrats of Indiana, because of the wide spread talk during the last few months that Governor Marshall would make a good candidate. The most ardent of the followers of Marshall are already saying that the death of Governor Johnson has removed the one man who might have defeated the Indiana governor for the nomination for president, and their talk is to the effect that the way is now practically clear for Marshall to land the nomination.

Dispatches from Washington also indicate that the loss of Governor Johnson is a hard blow to the democrats of the nation, for they are saying in the national capital that Johnson was almost sure of the nomination for president in 1912, and that it is going to be a hard job to find a man who can fill his place. In Washington the names of Governor Marshall of Indiana and Governor Harmon of Ohio, are discussed and the two men from the north most likely to figure in the race, while the name of Senator Culbertson, of Texas, is the one from the south who is looking up in that direction. It is not regarded as at all probable, however, that the democrats will nominate a southerner for president, and this fact leaves it almost a race between Marshall and Harmon. In such a race it is pointed out by the friends of the Indiana Governor, Marshall would be the favorite, because he is a new man in national politics and has no entangling alliances to bother him. Harmon was the attorney general in the cabinet of President Cleveland, and has always been a corporation lawyer in Ohio, and this latter fact is pointed out as one of the elements of his own weakness as a presidential candidate. True, he was elected governor of Ohio by a good majority, while the state went heavily for Taft, and the republican national ticket, and this is urged by his friends as proof of his popularity.

Point to His Record.
But Marshall's friends here are pointing also to his record along the same line. They tell you that he came out of obscurity and at one leap landed in the governor's chair by breaking down a great big republican majority in Indiana. They say if he can do this in Indiana, he can do the same in the nation.

Neither Marshall, Harmon or Culbertson are making any fight for the nomination for president, though it is but logical to assume that each has his weather eye peeled, and that he is watching the game closely. There is no telling what may turn up in the future, nor who will come out prominently before the people, so as to demand recognition or the nomination for president, but as the matter stands today there are just three available men in the democratic ranks for the honor, Marshall, Harmon and Culbertson. No one is considering Bryan as a candidate.

date again, so far as can be learned, and it is doubtful if Bryan himself even hopes for a fourth nomination. He has never said a word to indicate how he feels about it, and no one else has ever had the right to speak for him.

Tom Taggart came up from French Lick, last night, and shook hands with a lot of the faithful at his hotel, the Denison. One of the democrats from out in the state, who happened to be there when Taggart came in, was John B. Faulkner, of Michigan City, who has been paying some attention to the little bee that has been buzzing in his ear a song of the nomination for secretary of state. Mr. Faulkner says he has not yet made up his mind whether he will be a candidate for the place or not. He is just listening and will decide when he has learned what the party throughout the state thinks of the proposition of nominating him. Mr. Faulkner has been a member of the house of representatives several terms and has been regarded as one of the strong men in the democratic side of that body. At the last session he was counted as the real democratic leader of the house.

Some Talk Heard.
Some talk has been heard lately to the effect that Adam Wise of Plymouth, a member of the house during the last session of the legislature, may be a candidate for the democratic nomination for attorney general. Wise was elected to the house at a special election held after the session opened to fill the vacancy left by the death of William S. Barber, a republican. Wise got in late, but no sooner had he landed on the floor of the house than he began to make himself felt. The first day he was there he made a speech that showed him to be a wise head. He was not radical and not a strict partisan, and this made him friends. He has not made any announcement of his candidacy, but it is said that he is considering the idea of coming out for attorney general.

Old Company "B" Has a Reunion; Get Letter From Captain Dudley

At the recent reunion of Company B of the 19th Indiana Infantry held at the Glen Miller park, an interesting letter was read from Captain W. W. Dudley of the regiment. Captain Dudley is now a member of Washington, D. C., where he is connected with one of the U. S. government departments. He is also well known in this city.

The letter is given in full as follows:

Richard Williams,
Secretary, Company B.
Richmond, Ind.

Dear Dick:—

"Your postal card dated Aug. 25th reached me yesterday as I was working on an important case in one of the departments, and as I did not return to my office in time to write last night, I do so today. All day yesterday and today my mind has been recalling the same day of 1862, 47 years ago, our long march from Warrenton, Va., to New Baltimore on the pike. Captain Jacobs's accident, the bivouac along the Warrenton pike, the drawing of rations south of the road, the return to the pike, and resumption of the march, the dash of Stewart's battery B, to the front, the crash of his shots and the orders to face front and move through the woods to the top of the hill, the crash at the Doan house with Stonewall Jackson's troops, the long, stubborn fusillade, our movement on the rebel battery and its silencing the death of Major Sandy McCowan, the killing of Tom Benton and many more of Company B's best boys, the withdrawal from the field we had conquered, the hunt for wounded and dead and the long, weary midnight march to Manassas Junction. Thousands of other things crowd my memory, and no doubt will yours, and each of the survivors of Company B. Of course, I am proud of my own volunteer military services. Most of all I am proud of Company B, and her boys. There was no company in the regiment superior to Company B, and I love every survivor as a brother, but boys I can't get around these days. My wooden leg behaves all right, but the other one is not doing so well. The doctor tells me to be thankful, however. I can use it a little, for I will not have it many years. I get from my home to my office in time to write last night, I do so today. All day yesterday and today my mind has been recalling the same day of 1862, 47 years ago, our long march from Warrenton, Va., to New Baltimore on the pike. Captain Jacobs's accident, the bivouac along the Warrenton pike, the drawing of rations south of the road, the return to the pike, and resumption of the march, the dash of Stewart's battery B, to the front, the crash of his shots and the orders to face front and move through the woods to the top of the hill, the crash at the Doan house with Stonewall Jackson's troops, the long, stub-

Genre.

The term "genre" is French and means "man, his customs, habits and ways of life." A painter of domestic, rural or village life, or the writer who deals with the strictly human rather than the more romantic and unreal human situations. For instance, in the drama, Victor Hugo introduced the genre system in lieu of the stilted and unnatural style of the Louis XIV era.

ST. LOUIS PLANS BIG CELEBRATION

Many Notable Events Will Mark Centennial Celebration There.

ARMY VISITING MAYORS

CHIEF EXECUTIVES OF MORE THAN ONE THOUSAND CITIES ARE EXPECTED TO BE GUESTS OF THE CITY.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 22.—The most notable gathering of its kind ever held will be a feature of Centennial Week in this city, from October 3 to 9, when the mayors of more than one thousand cities of the United States will meet in a great conference or series of conferences to discuss problems of municipal government. Although the Centennial association and the Civic league of St. Louis have issued three thousand invitations for the chief executives of large and small municipalities to come to St. Louis to attend these meetings and be entertained during the week's celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the city it is not expected that more than one-third of the mayors will be able to attend, which in itself will be an unusual event, as it is not probable that half as many city rulers ever met together before.

Every effort is being made to provide appropriate entertainment for the visitors, and their wives and daughters will be especially cared for.

Will Be Busy Week.

From the day of their arrival, Monday, October 4, until their departure, six days later, the week will be a busy one for the visiting mayors. The program includes a reception, luncheon, banquet, attendance at the Veiled Prophet ball, one of the big events of the St. Louis annual carnival, and facilities to see all of the other features of the celebration. Among the latter will be grand pageants daily, and balloon, airship and aeroplane races.

Mayor Frederick H. Kreismann, president of the Centennial association will hold a reception for the visiting mayors in the city hall upon the morning of their arrival, and immediately following a luncheon will be given by the Civic League in the Hotel Jefferson, at which will be many other noted visitors.

In the afternoon an important conference will be held, at which the "commission" form of municipal government will be the principal topic of discussion. It is planned to have talks by mayors of cities which have the plan already in operation, the notable ones being Des Moines, Iowa and Galveston, Texas. Opponents of the plan also will speak.

Officers of the league are now considering the advisability of holding other formal conferences, and it is probable that at least one more will be arranged for, on subjects to be selected.

An Unique Invitation.

Each mayor who accepts an invitation to attend the centennial will be presented with an invitation and souvenir of the Veiled Prophet ball, which will be held in the new coliseum.

The Business Men's League, the chief organization of business men in St. Louis and one of the strongest organizations of its kind in the United States, will be host at what will be known as the "American Mayors' Banquet" on Wednesday evening, at which 2,200 guests are expected to be present. These will include the visiting mayors, the women accompanying them and other prominent guests.

The week will be filled out by many other events of a public character, which will be free to all, and as the Centennial association has obtained reduced railroad rates from all portions of the country it is expected that immense crowds of visitors will enjoy the celebration.

Question to Orders.

"You must push matters a little, James, said a chemist to his new boy. By calling a customer's attention to this article and that article you often effect a sale."

"Yes, sir," responded the new boy, and then he hastened to wait upon an elderly person who wanted a stamp. "Anything else, mam?" inquired the ambitious boy politely, "hair dye, cosmetic, face powder, rheumatic drops, belladonna, mole destroyer?"

The elderly lady deals over the way now.—London Tit-Bits.

"Lucky dog, that man Bosworth." "Has he come into a fortune?" "No, he has secured a certificate from his doctor showing that he has organic heart trouble. When an insurance agent attacks him hereafter he will merely have to show his certificate."—Chicago Record-Herald.
