FARMS FOR WORKERS.

Massachusetts Working Out a Plan to Relieve Congestion in Cities.

The homestead commission created by the last Massachusetts legislature and appointed by Governor Draper to consider means by which the poor living in congested city districts may be induced to establish homes in the open country gave its first public hearing at the statehouse in Boston a few days ago. Representative James H. Mellen of Worcester, who fathered the measure in the legislature, and Meyer Bloomfield of Boston were heard.

Mr. Mellen said that organized labor has never proposed a more important scheme than this, and while he expected that there would be an element of charity in making it a success, he hoped there would be nothing of paternalism. The proposition is too big for private persons, and he believed the government must take it up.

He believed it would be well to attempt to teach working people that they can live just as cheaply on a small farm as in the city, the decreased cost of family expenses being more than enough to pay the transportation costs. Then they should be interested in small farming in addition to their daily labors, thus at the same time increasing their independence and improving their health.

He believed that there are 2,500,000 acres of land in the commonwealth which can be bought for an average of $6 an acre, affording ample opportunity for the establishment of thousands of small farms such as would meet his idea, and even if workingmen could not pay for them in cash they could very soon be paid for out of the products of the soil.

Meyer Bloomfield of the civil service house said the problem before the commission is nothing less than the conservation of the natural and human resources of the state, and while he did not expect that a system of excursion trains would be established to carry people into the country, still he thought that those who scoff at this movement have little conception of what other countries have accomplished along this line.

He referred to the claim often made that poor working people living in the city do not desire to live elsewhere, but said his organization had sent out several thousand cards among the poor people and found that a majority would prefer a change.

THE FIRST TRADES UNION.

How the Labor Question Disrupted a Church Organization.

A bill had been introduced in the state legislature limiting the hours of factory labor to ten a day, and agitation in favor of its adoption ran high, writes I. T. Lincoln in the Atlantic. On the farm the day began at no particular hour, nor was there any stated time when work was ended, and a man was paid for a day's labor without regard to the length of it. Some, however, saw a distinction between farm and factory labor, and among these was the minister of the Baptist church.

One Sunday, at the hour of service, the congregation, in which mill owners and operatives sat side by side, was thrown into great excitement by the pastor, who preached a sermon advocating the ten hour bill, and when his hearers filed out of the meeting house that morning they were no longer a united body. The man who sold labor continued to listen to the preaching of the ten hour parson, but the man who bought labor built for himself another meeting house, and soon afterward the first labor union was formed.

The same causes which for years had been at work silently to create discord in the Baptist flock had at the same time been in operation in the factory, gradually separating the employer and employee in their personal relations until at last it seemed that their interests were no longer common and the future success of each must be to the disadvantage of the other. So industrial warfare took the place of mutual good will, and more than half a century passed before the contending factions began to see the folly of their antagonism.

Identified.
In many parts of England and especially in the villages of the Black Country it is quite a common thing for a man to be known so exclusively by a nickname that his real name is forgotten.

A gentleman had occasion once to ask a potter for the whereabouts of a certain John Williams.
"John Williams?" repeated the man thoughtfully, knitting his brows. "I have heard tell of it, John Williams. It is familiar, I say, sir," he exclaimed, as if seized by a sudden inspiration, "do he be married?"
"That's so," was the reply.
"And hez three of a family?"
"I believe so."
"Well, sir, I'm John Williams," London Globe.

The Jarndyce Case.
The Jarndyce case in "Bleak House" was based on fact. It was actually the famous Dyer-Sombre case. A French adventurer in the eighteenth century married a begum of Oude and acquired enormous wealth. I think it was he who built the Martimere at Agra, so famous in the Indian mutiny, and miles of other beautiful buildings of mud and chunam. How his affairs after death got into chancery I don't know, but the fact remains that every scrap of his wealth dissolved in the litigation. While it lasted members of the contesting families were cared for, and descendants are today holding commissions in the English army and other reputable positions.—New York Sun.

Reinforced concrete boats have proved so successful in Italy that five vessels, each of 120 tons or larger, have been built for the navy.

On the farms of England last year there were 1,494,000 horses employed.

PALLADIUM WANT ADS PAY.

CANADA'S OLD AGE PENSION.

Annuities Nontransferable and Cannot Be Seized For Debt.

Canada evidently is determined not to be confronted in her old age by a despairing poor law commission and an annoying labor problem. Through postal savings banks she has for some time been systematically encouraging thrift and now by a single act of the Dominion parliament proposes to supplement this by a bureau for the sale of old age annuities to workingmen.

In the establishment of this bureau the government does not tie up any funds of its own beyond the annual appropriation of $23,000 for the mere machinery. The smallest annuity offered is for $50 and the largest $900, beginning when the annuitant reaches the age of fifty-five. Annuities cannot be seized for debt, are nontransferable, and the money once paid in on account cannot be withdrawn. Payments that are interrupted by sickness, loss of employment or any other cause may be resumed whenever the workingman is able to make them. They may be made weekly, monthly, yearly or in lump sums, whichever is the most convenient.

According to a statistician of authority, the rates work out as follows: A workman who pays 25 cents a week obtains at the age of fifty-five an ordinary annuity of $47, or if he continues his weekly payments till he is seventy he thereafter receives nearly $200 annually. For the same weekly payment begun at twenty he receives at sixty an annuity of $130, and if he leaves it on deposit with the government with the understanding that it shall be employed to purchase additional amounts of annuity to commence at sixty-five he receives a further sum of $80, making his total annuity at sixty-five $210. If when he is twenty he begins with a lump sum of $10, followed by weekly payments of 25 cents, with lump sums of $10 every five years until he is sixty, he is entitled to an annuity of $151, but if his employer adds $10 a year the annuity at sixty becomes $233, and in the event of the annuitant's dying, say, at fifty his heirs receive $1,215, or if the employee pays 25 cents per week and the employer $10 a year the annuity at sixty is $231, and if the annuitant dies at fifty his heirs get $1,110.

A man may at forty, by a single deposit, pay arrears of premium between twenty and forty and complete the contract as if he had entered at twenty. Employers of labor may contract for annuities for employees and fraternal and benevolent societies for annuities for their members.

ENGLISH FACTORY RULES.

Injustice to Which Workers Are Subjected by Employers.

At a recent official inquiry into factory conditions in England the evidence showed some queer instances of the most tyrannical sort of employers. In a cotton mill, should a weaver do the most trifling injury to a piece of cloth he has to pay for the whole piece. This may swallow his entire week's wages, but there is this to be said—he gets the cloth and at wholesale price and may cut it up and sell it to his neighbors.

It is piece workers, especially those employed in the hosiery and tailoring trades, who suffer most severely from the piece system. Workers are in many cases forced to purchase all work which does not exactly comply with the directions given.

One girl in a Bristol factory who was given a dozen pairs of trousers to make put the pockets in at a wrong angle. She was forced to buy them all at a price which swallowed her wages for more than a whole month.

A collar maker made a slight error in the stitching of twelve dozen collars. The unfortunate young woman was forced to buy them all at a cost of over $5.
