

with his vessel, the Hamburg-American liner Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, slowly poking her nose through a dense fog, cleared early in the day and the bright sun shone through a thin haze, assuring complete success of the great pageant prepared for the wanderer.

It was just 7:40 a. m. when the liner reached Quarantine, and the Dolphin, yacht of the secretary of the navy, swung alongside, bearing, besides Secretary Meyer, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson—the two members of the cabinet who served as Mr. Roosevelt's advisers and Capt. Archibald W. Butt, aide to President Taft and formerly aide to Mr. Roosevelt, hearing a letter from the president to his predecessor.

Greet the Reporters.

Before the sun had reached the horizon, the first greeting to the ex-president was extended by the newspaper men, who left last night by tug to pick up the liner off Sandy Hook.

From the moment the big vessel, which had made the last stretch of the trip under forced draught, slowed down to the pace of the tug, it was one rousing, continuous ovation of greeting.

Every craft in New York waters, and many from foreign ports, in the lower bay, had dressed ship and flags were a-flutter, as the liner moved majestically to quarantine for the official greeting from the nation.

Along the west water front of Manhattan and Brooklyn hundreds of thousands of persons were hanked, to catch a glimpse of the fifteen mile water parade from Quarantine up the bay and the North river to 59th street and then back to the Battery at the lower tip of Manhattan.

Fog Delays Liner.

The fog had held the Kaiserin up somewhat, but early in the morning the wireless flashed the word that she would be approximately on time. At the appointed hour, the fleet of welcoming boats took up the journey down the bay. In two van were the revenue cutter Manhattan, bearing members of Mr. Roosevelt's family; the cutter Androscoggin, with the reception committee, and the Dolphin.

Of all the events of the busy arrival, the one that stood out most prominently was the meeting between Mr. Roosevelt and the members of his family whom he had not seen in fifteen months. The close friends and the relatives of the ex-president were on board the revenue cutter Manhattan. Far down the bay, with the lines of ships reaching for mile upon mile as a background and the skyscrapers of Manhattan visible beyond them, the little cutter swung alongside the gigantic liner.

Gets His First Taste.

Peering over the rail of the Kaiserin, high above the smokestack of the Manhattan, stood the former president surrounded by members of his party, getting his first taste of the splendors arrayed for him.

For the moment he was not the man of the day—he was a man of family, back from a long trip.

Archibald saw first, piping shrilly and shaking a handkerchief and his hat.

Leaning far over the railing, Mr. Roosevelt called in a stentorian voice, "Hello, boy."

Then he made out the other waving striding below as Quentin. "You look bully, Quentin," was his salute. And the lady yelled back together.

His Daughter-in-Law to Be. But the smile they got was dim compared with that of the ex-president gave to a pretty girl clinging to the arm of a young man. She fluttered a dainty handkerchief as Mr. Roosevelt bowed. She was Miss Eleanor B. Alexander, who on Monday becomes the bride of Theodore Roosevelt Jr.

Then there were more greetings when Mr. Roosevelt boarded the Manhattan.

Aboard her was Congressman Nicholas Longworth, greeting not only his father-in-law, but his wife, who went to England to meet the ex-president.

On the Manhattan when she went down the harbor were also Rear Admiral and Mrs. W. S. Cowles, W. S. Cowles, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. Cowles and Mrs. Cowles and Mrs. Robinson are Mr. Roosevelt's sisters.

At Quarantine there was a fleet of newspaper boats, the cutter Seneca, and the cutter Mohawk, bearing congressmen and other dignitaries.

Passengers Cheer Him.

As the ex-president led his party—Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Longworth, Miss Ethel, Kermit, and his secretaries—down the side ladder, the passengers on the Kaiserin set up a great cheer, and the Manhattan answered with a blast of the whistle. Greetings over, the party assembled about the breakfast table in the Manhattan's saloon.

In the meantime, the ships to participate in the marine parade or bearing spectators, were assembling off Clifton, S. I., the parading ships being in double column, 400 feet apart, with the head of Stapleton, in the same formation the other vessels lay in lines extending to a point off Robbins Reef lighthouse at the mouth of the Kill-von-kull.

Headed for the stream, ready to fall in behind the parade leaders, the gay lines in the morning sun stretched like a decorated avenue across the wide bay.

The Androscoggin pushed through the lines, having the right of way, with the three hundred or more of official welcome at the rail's edge, craning for the first glimpse of their guest.

Changes Ship Again.

The Androscoggin near the Manhattan, there was a moment's parley and then Mr. Roosevelt went over to the vessel that was to bear him through the parade, leaving his family upon the Kaiserin.

Three long blasts from the Dalsell liner, flagship of the parading fleet, signalled the news of the transfer of Mr. Roosevelt to the official boat.

Then simultaneously the vessels burst out with a mighty roar, a whistle lasting two full minutes. At the same time, the guns of the gigantic South Carolina banged away at the salute, and from down the bay came the boom of guns of Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton, guarding the Narrows. The other government vessels joined, torpedo boats, cutters and smaller craft and Governor's Island grew hazy in the smoke of the guns.

During the din, Mr. Roosevelt, with his teeth showing in the familiar smile and vowing that he was "de-lighted," was grasping the hands of the committeemen in rapid fire fashion.

A Message from Taft. Capt. Butt awaited until Roosevelt was on board before he presented the letter from Taft, and at the same time Adjutant General Verbeck, representative of Governor Hughes, presented a congratulatory letter from the latter.

Mr. Roosevelt was most happy over the reception accorded him. He was on the bridge of the Kaiserin when he first saw the array of welcoming ships.

At his first sight of the South Carolina he jumped up and down like a school boy, waving his hat and yelling to the newspaper men and all others near him, "Look at that! A Dreadnaught! Well, by Godfrey!"

On the Androscoggin he was scarcely less effusive. He appeared to be tickled at the presence of the battleship as a youngster with a new toy, and time and again he pointed to the great man-of-war, and said, "Isn't she a beauty; this is one of the best parts of it all."

A little incident at Quarantine showed the former president's good spirits. The two mail boats, the Postmaster General and the President, swung up to the Kaiserin and gave the regulation salute.

The clerks paused for an instant in the bustle of taking sacks and Mr. Roosevelt rewarded them with a wave of the hat and a cry, "How are you there?"

Clad in Frock Coat. Clad in frock coat and silk hat, he disappointed the rough riders, who had hoped for khaki and puttees at the least—Mr. Roosevelt watched the maneuvering of the conglomerate armada from the Androscoggin with interest.

All the time he was beset by newspaper men. He had been greeted first by a group of them on the tug Gilkinson and they were at his side nearly all the day.

The newspaper men and photographers had a flotilla by themselves. Representatives of scores of periodicals, American and foreign, were on hand. Several papers had special tugs. The Hamburg-American liner ran a large tug for the accommodation of newsgatherers, and the revenue cutter Seneca was given over to the parade. They were on the Androscoggin and the Manhattan besides. How many hundreds of photographs were taken today no one can estimate.

The movements of the marine parade were governed by a system of code signals. Five minutes before the giving of the starting order, the attention signal was run from the signal yard of the Androscoggin. Then came the single letter "P," meaning "prepare to start in ten minutes."

Started by Signals. Single letters were used for all the orders, the others being: "S" for start; "T" for the turn about the stakeboat off 59th street, and "D" for the dismissal after Mr. Roosevelt's landing.

In and out the revenue cutters and the flotilla of police boats were darting, patrolling the bay, when the parade signal was flown.

Then there came a few minutes of bustle and adjustment. "It looks bigger than the fleet that went around the world," Mr. Roosevelt said once, turning to those nearest him with a glowing smile. His enthusiasm was irrepressible, and there was little chance for conventional dignity on the part of the committeemen surrounding him. His patent joy was too infectious.

The start of the marine parade was made to the screeching of whistles which bore the message to Manhattan crowds, miles away.

The Androscoggin swung around in a business-like manner and then forged ahead, passing between the two files of vessels. Then, one by one the other ships swung into her wake.

PRESS BUREAU IS CAUSING DISPUTE AMONG DEMOCRATS

They Are Divided in Opinion as to Whether This Move Will Be for the Best Interests of Party.

SOME FEAR IT WILL BOOST ONLY TAGGART

Large Part of the Expense of Such a Bureau Would Fall Upon the Candidates—Old Machine Rebuilt.

(Palladium Special)

Indianapolis, Ind. June 18.—Since the democratic state committee began talking about establishing a press bureau for the coming campaign a good deal of suspicion has been aroused among certain democrats over whether or not the bureau will be a good thing. The trouble seems to lie in the fact that many of them are suspicious that the bureau may become a personal or factional affair, and that one faction or the other in the party will gain control of it and use it against the other faction. This suspicion seems to be especially strong among the friends of Governor Marshall, and they are not yet decided on the question of whether such a bureau should be established.

Some of the democrats are firm in the belief that if a press bureau is established it will become merely a Tom Taggart boosting affair and that everything that is sent from the bureau for publication in the democratic papers of the state will have to bear the O. K. of the French Lick boss before it will be allowed to go out.

It Would Be Dangerous.

They all recognize the fact that Tom Taggart is a practical politician and that he knows the game from one end to the other, and that a press bureau in his hands and under his domination would be a dangerous thing for the rest of the party, especially when the expense of maintaining it is to be paid largely by the state committee and by the state candidates. The papers themselves are to pay a part of the cost of maintaining the press bureau if one is established, but a large part of the expense will fall on the candidates and be paid from the campaign fund.

Taggart acknowledged at the state convention after he had been defeated in his effort to prevent the adoption of the governor's plan for the nomination of a candidate for United States senator, that his machine was in the scrap heap, and a good many democrats who had always fought Taggart in party affairs were tickled to death at the turn of affairs. But they see now that his machine has been taken from the scrap pile and put together again, and that it will be a dangerous thing, as it used to be, unless it is crushed. They believe that the establishment of the press bureau for the campaign is a part of the Taggart scheme to elevate the machine into control of the party once more.

For "Good of Party"

Great things could be accomplished by Taggart and his machine if it were to get a complete press bureau in operation in the state which would send out official matter to the democratic papers of the state. The papers would not know the difference. They would undoubtedly print the matter sent to them under the belief that it was for the good of the party, and they would not suspect, unless it was pointed out to them that Taggart was behind the whole scheme. Such a plan would give Taggart the influence of several hundred papers in the state, something he could not get otherwise.

If Taggart was to get control of the press bureau it is not to be expected that he would use it for the purpose of giving Governor Marshall any more publicity and credit than could be avoided. Ever since Marshall licked Taggart and his machine in the convention Marshall's friends have had their chin in the air so to speak, and have looked it over the old crowd. But if Taggart can get his press bureau to running he will undoubtedly take the tide off some one.

A good many democrats believe that a press bureau during the campaign could accomplish much for the party if it could be run as a straight out party affair and not degenerate into a personal or factional institution, but they can not see how it can be run that way. They are afraid of the scheme.

French Lick Meeting.

The sub-committee appointed by the democratic state committee consisting of Edward G. Hoffman of Fort Wayne, George Beebe of Anderson, and Samuel M. Ralston of Lebanon, to arrange for the organization of a press bureau failed to hold a meeting in this city this week, owing to the illness of the wife of Stokes Jackson, state chairman. The committee will, however, have a meeting at French Lick next week where the democratic editors meet there to discuss campaign plans, and it may be that something will result from that meeting. It is said that ever since it became known that the committee was figuring on establishing a press bureau and that the manager would be paid a salary of $500 a week the committee has been swamped with applications for the job. These applicants have come from all over Indiana and many from other states.

Much attention will be paid during the campaign this year by the republicans to the work of effecting close organization throughout the state and will carry it into many places where no republican club exists at this time. Mr. Hastings says there is a great deal of talk about the organization of Beveridge clubs. It is always customary during campaigns to give to clubs the name of the leading candidate on the ticket, which, this year happens to be Senator Beveridge inasmuch as the senatorship is the highest office to be voted for this year. In Allen county a movement is on foot for the organization of a big Beveridge club, and similar movements are said to have been started in Hammond, Gary, South Bend, and other places. In former campaigns the Lincoln league has done a great amount of work for the ticket, and it is the intention of the officers this year to make it as great a factor as it has been in the past.

Lee Is Very Active. State Chairman Lee is beginning the work of bringing the republican editors of the state into close touch with each other and with the state organization. He proposes to hold district meetings of the editors at which campaign plans will be discussed and worked out in such a way as to get the greatest amount of good out of the work of the newspapers.

Chairman Lee has already had a meeting with the editors of the republican papers in the Fourth district, and he says he found them all enthusiastic and anxious to push the campaign vigorously. While the Fourth district is hopelessly democratic and will re-elect Congressman Lincoln Dixon this year, there are several close legislative districts in the Fourth which the republicans hope to carry. Reports from all over the state say that the republican editors are already hammering at the enemy and that it will be a brisk campaign from a newspaper standpoint until the day of the election.

State Senator Stephen B. Fleming of Fort Wayne, president of the Indiana Brews' association was in the city yesterday and he hopped on E. S. Shumaker through the papers for declaring that the brewers will spend $250,000 this year to elect members of the legislature who will vote to repeal the county option law. He says the brewers are not going to do anything of the kind, and he further says that the brewers are willing to show on their books every cent collected by the association and every cent expended and what it was spent for, provided the anti-saloon league officers will consent to make the same kind of showing. Fleming says he doubts whether the anti-saloon people will be willing to do this.

While the sum of $350,000 may be a little bit too high, it is well understood that the brewers will spend money in the campaign, and that it will be spent in the interest of the democratic ticket.

EXTEND STREETS.

Viewers today reported favorably on the proposed extension of South Eighth street and the construction of an alley between South Seventh and Eighth, to south Q street. The extensions are very short. At the next meeting of the county commissioners it is probable that an order will be issued directing the township trustee to proceed with the opening of the streets.

MASONS DISCUSS BUILDING. Members of the Masonic lodge at Whitewater will have up for discussion this evening matters pertaining to the remodeling of their present home, or an entire new building for the lodge. Both plans have been suggested. The order has practically outgrown its present quarters.

HAWLEY INTERESTS GAIN CONTROL OF CONNECTING LINK

Formal Transfer of C., C. & L. Line to Chesapeake & Ohio Will Take Place at Receiver's Sale Next Week.

WILL SPEND MILLIONS TO IMPROVE PROPERTY

Surveyors Already at Work Figuring Cost of Curve Elimination and Grade Reductions.—Cheaper Coal.

After ten years of a precarious existence as an independent railroad, the C., C. & L. will next week pass into the control of the Chesapeake and Ohio system and at once become the great connecting link between the Hawley seaboard lines and his western connections.

Millions of dollars will be spent in elimination of curves and in grade reduction, the surveys for which already have been commenced. The Hawley system will benefit by gaining a direct entrance into Chicago, while Richmond will be able to secure more advantageous freight rates on many commodities, principally coal.

The information comes from James P. Goodrich, who has been receiver for the company since the bondholders' petition was granted about a year ago. The failure of the railroad to redeem its mortgages a month ago caused the federal judge in Indianapolis to set June 23 as the date for the formal sale of the property and it has now become definitely known that the C. & O. interests are the only ones who will enter a bid.

Part of Hawley System. Since the construction of the C., C. & L. through this section ten years ago, and its later continuation into Cincinnati and Chicago, where valuable terminal sites have been secured, railroad men throughout the west have been anticipating just such a course as has been followed. As an independent line it could not be made to pay, but as a part of the great Hawley system, stretching from the Atlantic seaboard far into the western states, the road at once becomes valuable.

Hawley lacked an entrance into Chicago from the east and his officials were obliged to route their freight by way of competing lines. The C., C. & L. is the shortest rail route between Cincinnati and Chicago, and its facilities will go far towards completing his dream of a transcontinental system.

As a part of the Hawley system are the Chesapeake and Ohio, and Hocking Valley in the east and south, the Clover Leaf Route through Indiana and Illinois and into St. Louis and the Chicago and Alton, Missouri, Kansas and Texas, Frisco and Minneapolis and St. Louis systems, west of Chicago. Thus the C., C. & L. will connect the east and west kingdoms of the railroad world, and form a combination that will rival the transcontinental properties of the Goulds or even the Harriman interests.

Richmond's Advantage. The direct advantage accruing to Richmond, aside from improved service that will be inaugurated, will be in the matter of reduced freight rates. The cost of freight interchange at Cincinnati on coal from West Virginia fields will be done away with Mr. Goodrich stated this morning that the result will be the cheapest rates on coal that Richmond has ever enjoyed. The competition will force the Pennsylvania lines to lower rates as well, and both Indiana and Ohio coal will be cheaper to the consumer than at present.

For the past few weeks surveying parties in the employ of the Hawley interests have been working on the line out of Cincinnati and will soon reach Richmond. Figures are being obtained on the cost of shortening the road, eliminating the curves made in the hasty construction, and cutting down the worst grades. Mr. Goodrich stated that it would be necessary for the purchasers to spend about three million dollars in improving the road, a half of this to go for grade reductions and work on the road bed, and the remainder for new switches, sidings and rolling stock. Then will the road be equal to any, and it is expected actively to compete for passenger traffic between its terminals.

Consideration Not Known. Although it is probable that the deal has already been consummated and the formal transfer at receiver's sale is all that remains, the price paid for the property is not known. The bonded indebtedness is $5,200,000 and by order of the court it cannot be sold for less than this amount.

TRY NEGRO NEXT MONTH. William Lewis will be tried for the murder of Albert Dickey on July 11, according to the statement of Judge Fox of the circuit court this morning. The case was postponed from June 27. He is the first man in several years indicted for murder who has spent so much time in the county jail awaiting trial, having been arrested early in April. It has been customary for them to enter pleas of guilty to the indictments soon after being arrested, but Lewis intends to fight the case.

ATHLETIC COACH GOES TO CHICAGO

Glen Thistlethwaite, Head of Earlham Teams, Will Assist Coach Besdick.

HAD A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

QUAKER COLLEGE TEAMS MADE A VERY SATISFACTORY SHOWING IN ALL BRANCHES—NUMEROUS VICTORIES.

Coach Glen Thistlethwaite, of the Earlham athletic teams, left the college yesterday for his summer vacation, crowned with the laurels won on gridiron, diamond and track. He expects to spend a part of his vacation at his home in this state and later to attend Chicago University and work with Coach Besdick on the new football rules with the Chicago University team.

The past year has been particularly successful for the Earlham coach. Numerous victories have come to Earlham teams after hard workouts on Reid Field, but the greatest work of the coach was done in his room in Bundy hall. Thistlethwaite is a scientific man and theory after theory of plays was worked out by him before being tried on the field. Much of Earlham's success in football was due to his practical demonstration of plays. Thistlethwaite came to the college with knowledge of over one hundred plays in football and before the season had closed, many were in use.

Basket ball came next and Coach Thistlethwaite and Dr. Holmes worked hand in hand and secured the best of results. Secondary championship of basketball came to the team as the result of the team work of the coaches and the hard practice of the squad.

The hand of Thistlethwaite was again seen in track and not a little of the team's success in the field meets this year is due to the Quaker coach. Conrad, however, can claim the title of the best college athlete in America. He now holds more of his own college records than any other student in this country.

At Chicago University Thistlethwaite will assist Coach Besdick. Besdick is director of athletics at Arkansas University and will have charge of Coach Stagg's gridiron warriors during the summer. The two coaches expect to make a practical study of the new football rules.
