

WANTED TO APPEAL TO JUSTICE COURT

Did Chas. Thompson When He Was Fined for Provoke in Police Court.

HAD RACKET WITH BARBER

AND HE SAYS HE INTENDS TO CHARGE HARRY SHEPPARD
WITH PROVOKE—HE HANDS A
BROADSIDE TO THE MAYOR.

"I appeal it to 'Squire Beyerle's court," exclaimed Charles V. Thompson, a real estate dealer, in city court this morning, as he was fined $5 and costs for provoke on charges preferred by Harry Sheppard, who has a barber shop on North Ninth street.

"No you won't," said the mayor, "I'll go to the circuit court," exclaimed Thompson, but he did not make good his threat.

Thompson went into Sheppard's barber shop yesterday and it is alleged swore and cursed the barber because he had not paid his rent. He was arrested yesterday.

Sheppard walked through police headquarters just as Thompson was paying his fine, Thompson glaring at him with hate enough to frighten a lion, snapped out.

He Makes a Threat.

"This is not the last of the case, my friend."

Thompson stated he would immediately file charges of provoke against Sheppard as, he affirms, the barber came into his office yesterday and damned him and made all sorts of insinuations as to his honesty and character.

"I believe I can prove that he had a poker game in the house he is renting from me on South Sixteenth street about a month ago. His wife was up in the country and there was a bunch of men there. I think they had some beer and the neighbors say there was a big time on. I'll surely make it hot for that young fellow."

"Say," said Thompson to a reporter, "didn't you notice the way the mayor eyed me as I went into court. Why, he's unfair. Guess he knows I voted against him at the last election."

FIRE AGENTS MEET

(American News Service.)
Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 30.—An important gathering of insurance men, the Michigan Association of Local Fire Insurance Agents—convened here today with many members in attendance, in addition to a considerable number of prominent fire insurance men from Detroit, Chicago and other points. The proposed fire marshal and agents' fee license bills are among the more important matters to be discussed during the two days' session.

RASH APPEARS AGAIN.

Summer Eczema and Hot Weather
Skin Troubles Demand Prompt Treatment With Poslam.

All skin troubles which are prevalent in hot weather—rashes, inflammations, so-called summer eczema, itching spots, hives, pimples, etc., demand the use of poslam for their prompt eradication. Their causes are found in over heated blood, skin irritation, digestive disorders, etc. In some persons the eating of fish or berries in certain months always brings them on. For clearing the complexion, red or inflamed noses, sunburn, mosquito bites, burns, etc., poslam should be used in preference to aught else, surprising results being noted after a single application.

The readiness with which poslam heals small surfaces and minor troubles is but an indication of its rapid action in curing eczema, tetter, scabies, itch, etc., on hands, limbs, scalp or any part of the body.

A special 50-cent package of poslam is prepared for minor uses, and this, as well as the regular $3 jar, is on sale by all druggists, particularly W. H. Sudhoff.

But a free sample, which will afford a convincing test, may be obtained by mail, by writing to the Emergency Laboratories, 33 West 25th street, New York City.

Dickens' Granddaughters Need the Money

The granddaughters of Charles Dickens, the great English novelist, for whose benefit a world-wide movement has been launched by Dickens publishers, readers and lovers, in the expectation that $100,000 at least may be subscribed to insure these descendants of the famous genius a competency throughout their lives. It is said they are living in Great Britain in absolute poverty, while there are 24,000,000 of Dickens' novels in existence today. The method of securing the contribution is the issuance of Charles Dickens Testimonial Stamps which may be placed in all volumes of Dickens extant. At a stipulated sum per stamp as a sort of a royalty the $100,000 could easily be raised. Thomas Hardy, Andrew Lang and others have taken up the scheme on the initiative of the Strand Magazine.

William Jennings Bryan Clouds Democratic Situation in State

(Palladium Special)

Indianapolis, Aug. 30.—Just as he was boarding a sleeper headed toward St. Louis, at the Union Station Monday night, William Jennings Bryan, clouded the Indiana Democratic horizon considerably by a statement concerning his coming to Indiana. He was reminded plainly that he had told Indianapolis men in confidence he had not a single open date from now until election. This, he said, was incorrect.

"I haven't apportioned a great deal of my time yet," he said. I have simply promised to go to a number of states, but I do not care now to discuss the number of dates which I have open. I prefer that announcements of speaking dates should come from the campaign committees."

The significant phase of these remarks is regarded as Mr. Bryan's reluctance to discuss the number of dates which he still has open before election. On his last visit to Indianapolis he made the statement, according to a very reliable authority, that no one need worry about him invading Indiana as his time was already fully taken up. At the same time the democratic state committee continued to promise he would be here extending the time from one day to three days and finally promising Hoosiers a whole week of the peerless one. It is strongly rumored however, that in addition to the opposition of Thomas Taggart to Bryan's coming, the democratic state committee is having a great deal of trouble in raising $600, the amount necessary to secure the services of Mr. Bryan for one speech.

William J. Bryan and Thomas Taggart met Monday night in the Denison hotel. The scene was beautifully staged with a large bunch of faithful democratic shear wavers in the background. The protagonists appeared perfectly unconscious of the presence of newspaper men, and yet this is what happened.

"Who's gona eat," asked Bryan.

"Taggart, are you gona eat?"

"I have just et," replied Taggart.

"Just a moment, Mr. Bryan, I want to see you."

They walked away. Taggart first inserted a thumb and finger in Bryan's buttonhole, and then thrust an arm within the Nebraskan's. The effect was lovely. They entered the Denison cafe and Mr. Bryan was seated. They talked three minutes. Mr. Taggart walked out. What passed between the arch-enemies in that brief conversation would doubtless be interesting. But for the gallery work the stunt is unmatched by anything the democrats have pulled off in the present campaign.

Mr. Bryan talked quite freely on political questions as usual. He said at first he would not discuss the Taft letter. Later he concluded to make the following remarks:

"I not two things in particular in the letter. First, it is an attempt to get the two factions of the party together in one company. Second, it favors reduction of the tariff by separate bills, rather than by general bills."

When we tried that in '92 the republicans ridiculed us. They called our bills pop-gun bills. It is gratifying to see another democratic plan endorsed by a republican president.

"The attempt to get the two republican factions together is interesting to one who knows the intensity of feeling between the two factions."

Mr. Bryan was told that Edgar Perkins, an Indianapolis labor leader who says he is for Bryan first, last and all the time, had declared Bryan had been an insurgent fourteen years.

"I have been advocating reforms for something more than that time, several of which have been taken up by the republicans," he said.

"Is insurgency growing in the democratic party? Well, the democratic party became an insurgent party in 1896, if you mean by insurgency, the taking up of remedial legislation."

He said concerning the defeat of Livingston, a democrat, in eGorgia, because he had voted with Cannon: "I am not putting on mourning when a Cannon democrat is left at home."

"He independent voters," declared Mr. Bryan, "are steadily increasing. It is a healthy sign if you mean by independent voters the men who make their votes represent their views on public questions."

When asked if there is any likelihood of him becoming a candidate for president again, he said: "I will reply simply as I have a great many times before. I never expect to be a candidate for any office again."

STORY HOW MARK TWIN LOST RACE

His Futile Chase After a Tallyho Coach an Amusing Incident.

HE MISSED CELEBRATION

WHY. W. D. HOWELLS AND FAM-OUS HUMORIST DID NOT AT-TEND CENTENNIAL OF THE BATTLE OF CONCORD, N. H.

In his reminiscences of Mark Twain in Harper's Magazine W. D. Howells tells amusingly of the time when he and Mr. Clemens missed the anniversary of the battle of Concord:

"Mark Twain came on to Cambridge in April, 1875, to go with me to the centennial ceremonies at Concord in celebration of the battle of the minutemen with the British troops a hundred years before. We both had special invitations, including passage from Boston, but I said why bother to go to Boston when we could just as well take the train for Concord at the Cambridge station. He equally decided that it would be absurd, so we breakfasted deliberately and then walked to the station, reasoning of many things, as usual.

"When the train stopped we found it packed inside and out. People stood dense on the platforms of the cars. To our startled eyes they seemed to project from the windows, and unless memory betrays me they lay strewn upon the roofs like brakenmeat slain at the post of duty. We remounted the same worn steps of Porter's station and began exploring North Cambridge for some means of transportation overland to Concord, for we were that far on the road by which the British went and came on the day of the battle. The livermen whom we appealed to received us, some with compassion, some with derision, but in either mood convinced us that we could not have hired a cat to attempt our conveyance, much less a horse or vehicle of any description.

"It was a raw, windy day, very unlike the exceptionally hot April day when the routed redcoats, pursued by the Colonials, fled panting back to Boston, with their tongues hanging out like dogs, but we could not take due comfort in the vision of their discomfort. We could almost envy them, for they had at least got to Concord. A swift procession of coaches, carriages and buggies, all going to Concord, passed us, inert and helpless, cold the sidewalk in the peculiarly cold mud of North Cambridge. We began to wonder if we might not stop one of them and bribe it to take us.

"I felt keenly the shame of defeat and the guilt of responsibility for our failure, and when a gay party of students came toward us on the top of a tallyho, luxuriantly empty inside, we felt that our chance had come and our last chance. He said that if I would stop them and tell them who I was they would gladly, perhaps proudly, give us passage. I contended that if with his far vaster renown he would approach them our success would be assured.

"While we stood, lost in this contest of civilities, the coach passed us, with gay notes blown from the horns of the students, and then Clemens started in pursuit, encouraged with shouts from the merry party, who could not imagine who was trying to run them down, to a rivalry of speed. The unequal match could end only in one way, and I am glad I cannot recall what he said when he came back to me. Since then I have often wondered at the grief which would have wrung those blithe young hearts if they could have known that they might have had the company of Mark Twain to Concord that day and did not.

"We hung about unavailing in the bitter wind awhile longer and then slowly, very slowly, made our way home. We wished to pass as much time as possible in order to give probability to the deceit we intended to practice, for we could not bear to own ourselves baffled in our boasted wisdom of taking the train at Porter's station and had agreed to say that we had been to Concord and got back. Even after coming home to my house we felt that our statement would be wanting in vermin. Trade without further delay, and we crept quietly into my library and made up a roaring fire on the hearth and thawed ourselves out in the heat of it before we regained our courage for the undertaking. With all these precautions we failed, for when our statement was imparted to the proposed victim she instantly pronounced it unreliable, and we were left with it on our hands intact. I think the humor of this situation was finally a greater pleasure to Clemens than an actual visit to Concord would have been. Only a few weeks before his death he laughed our defeat over with one of my family in Bermuda and exulted in our prompt detection."
