ADVANTAGES OF BRICK-SET FURNACES

Have the furnace men of the United States been so led astray by the demand for cheapness that they have absolutely forgotten there is some benefit in having some of the things done which are now done? Don't you think it is a wise heating system? There are many furnace men throughout the country who smile when the brick furnace chamber is mentioned and do not seem to have any idea that it has advantages which are not in many ways approached. The advanced iron castings, even though copper is now spending a great deal of money to cover the galvanized iron casing of portable furnaces with insulating material to prevent any loss of heat. Even this does not give the same amount of heat as the plain iron can get from having the heating surface enclosed within a brick chamber.

Invariably there is much more space between the walls of the chamber and the heating surface than is found in the average portable furnace. This is a great advantage in that a large volume of air is heated because the brick walls of the chamber become quite hot and this heat is retained to be absorbed by the air passing through the furnace after the fire has been put out. This is a heating cut-off which is much higher temperature than the walls. Furnaces of this character can be found in the older sections of the U. S. that have been in use for more than 40 years. The furnace men, who are a strong advocate of the present day portable furnaces and who have had no experience whatever with the old brick encased furnaces, might do well to look over some of its advantages. I have pointed out that they have a much longer life than many of the furnaces demonstrating that they had a durability which would tax the best cast iron furnace of today to meet, that they had large air chambers and provided a large volume of air at a low temperature. The heat was retained in the chamber and when it had died down it was possible for the heat in the walls of the brick chamber to keep the house at a somewhat comfortable temperature until attention could be given to the fire to warm the house to a comfortable temperature again. The special disadvantage in the eyes of the present day buyer is the cost, but it is quite possible that the additional investment required is not great as the additional coal required with some of the smaller furnaces of today. The brick encased furnaces have in its means gone out of existence. In many places men who have been in the furnace business for years and years have recommended it to their customers and install it in their houses. I believe that some advantage could be gained by the men who are not familiar with what was done in the early days looking into the work that has been done and making some study for themselves of the reasons underlying the practice of the forefathers of the furnace trade.

THE HOME BEAUTIFUL -- NO. 6

Build a home. No investment is so certain to be permanently valuable. Ordinary care in the selection of a location, and careful supervision of the work as it progresses assures the builder of an asset which will be constantly appreciating. Even if it is necessary to practice economy to own a home you will be amply repaid in future satisfaction. The home owner possesses a basis of credit readily appreciated by the business man and almost any temporary sacrifice is small when compared with the ultimate satisfaction experienced by the man who owns a home free of encumbrances.

An attractive 2 story basement house 38 feet x 28 feet, first story brick with stone trimming, second story either stucco or siding could be made very attractive by the use of shingles. Has two large mantels in first story and should be finished in hardwood except kitchen and pantry which should be in Yellow Pine. Second floor should be Birch, white enamel finish. Estimated cost $2800 to $3200.

Build Your Home
In BEALLVIEW

It's the coming suburb of Richmond. We still have 200 lots in Beall View addition, some of these being desirable for building homes. While Beall View is out of the city corporation, it still has all the conveniences of the city.

A house in Beall View means lower taxes; within a few blocks of street car line; electric light; Richmond city water; and then your property is increasing in value because of the fact we are bringing new factories to the South End.

Price of these lots from $100.00 to $350.00, cash or payments. $6.00 down and $1.00 per week. Address, Adolph Bickwedel, Pres. Cash Beall, Secretary.
