"You're very kind," said the stout lady, "but I've quite given up trying to get thin. Oh, I know," she went on as the other interrupted, "but you cannot induce me to take up any new fads. The last one I tried settled that. They made me imagine that I was a beautiful lily swaying in the summer breeze from side to side. I decided that was ridiculous for a woman of my weight and so—"

"Perhaps you didn't give it a fair trial," suggested her friend.

"Perhaps not, but my husband came in just when I was being a lily, and he—"

"Men never understand, do they?" said her friend.

Too Much For His Faith.

"The late Bishop Hare," said a Sioux Falls physician, "used, very reasonably, to impute skepticism to misunderstanding."

"He once told me about a business man of skeptical tendencies who said to him:

"My dear Mr. Hare, I do not refuse to believe in the story of the ark. I can accept the ark's enormous size, its odd shape and the vast number of animals it contained. But when I am asked, my dear doctor, to believe that the children of Israel carried this unwieldy thing for forty years in the wilderness—well, then, I'm bound to say, my faith breaks down."

A Test That Failed.

Her husband was an oculist, and she desired to help him. She studied hard and then sought to begin practice on the negro cook. She placed the cook in position and then began with the cards that contained the big and little letters. She selected the extreme lenses, and each time she tried one she said:

"Martha, can you read the letters with that lens?"

"No," the cook said; "I can't read it yet."

The ambitious wife tried and tried, going through her entire supply of lenses, but the result was the same. Finally the cook said:

"Tain't no use. You never will teach me to read that way. I ought to have learned when I was a kid."—Kansas City Star.

Her Long Suit.

"Mrs. Promoter informs me that you and I are to be partners in the whist game at her card party tonight," imparted the major, meeting the clever Mrs. Flurry on the avenue. "I didn't know you played whist."

"Oh, I play a little, major. It's a beautiful day, isn't it?"

"Yes. Now let me give you a pointer," rejoined the major, who was as earnest in his whist playing as he was in his whist playing. "In the game tonight if you have long suit use it."

"Very well, major. I shall. There goes Mrs. Skittle, whom I want to see. Goodbye, major. I'll wear my long suit."—Judge's Library.

The Scrap Book

They All Told Him.

The old gentleman from the back lots was holding up a line of passengers at the ticket office of a Chicago station the other day.

"I want a ticket to New York."

"Twenty dollars."

"What? Twenty dollars? The last time I went it was only ten!"

"Twenty dollars, please."

"How long has the fare been raised? I ain't got no $20!"

"Twenty dollars is the fare. Hurry up!"

"I ain't going to pay no twenty. I know I only put up ten last time."

"Then get out of the way. Don't you see you're holding up all these people? If you want to go to New York it will cost you $20. More on!"

"Where can I go for $10, then?"

"Well, the line of people told him in one emphatic monosyllable.

The Test.

I look into my neighbor's eyes
And twist a smile that's strangely grim.
I'm thinking, Would he feel surprise
To know just what I think of him?

I gaze into my dear friend's face,
And with this thought my soul is stirred:
What revolution would take place
Were I to tell her what I've heard?

I stare into my mirror there
With eyes that hunger to be true
And say aloud, Would it be fair
To mention all I know of you?

—Lurana W. Sheldon.

Beaten by a Professional.

Hank Johnson had long enjoyed the distinction of being the homeliest man in Canyonville, so it was somewhat of a shock to him when Steve Billings came into the Tourists' Retreat and announced, "Boys, there's a homelier man than Hank over at the depot—feller by the name of Charles Battel Loomis, that gives lectures."

Without a word Hank started across the road and was gone some time.

"Was," Steve said when Hank returned, "dye give up?"

"Heck!" Hank replied, with supreme disgust. "He's a professional."—Success Magazine.

Spoiled the Treatment.

She was unquestionably a stout woman. She occupied more than one person's share of space in the street car and quite overshadowed her trim companion. "You've really ought to try something," said her friend in reply to an aside from the stout lady herself regarding her weight. "A woman I know reduced herself twenty pounds in a very few months by taking a
