Of Interest To Farmers

A pound of raisins, cured with special reference to eating out of hand, costs at retail 15 cents. Not only are they an appetizing ration, but from the standpoint of nutritive elements they compare favorably pound for pound with meat and eggs at the same price.

A Vermont farmer who has tested the method for twenty years, reports in his eastern farm journal that he has successfully killed willow trees, root and top, by removing a two foot girdle of bark the latter part of August. For many readers who have had trouble killing these hardy trees this suggestion is worth remembering.

Good profits may be made in dairy-farming and fruit raising; but, if reports are to be credited, the easiest money is made by a big army of sharks and grafters who make a business of farming success, the class of folks who are always hotfoot to get something for nothing, the crop of which seems perennial, like quick grass, mumps and fleas.

The low form of vegetable life that makes the green scum in water tanks may be done away with by dissolving copper sulphate in the tank at the rate of one two-hundredths of a pound of the chemical to a hundred gallons of water. This chemical is poisonous and used in larger quantities than this would be injurious to the stock drinking it.

Conditions point to a record breaking cotton crop for the year. The area planted is 35,000,000 acres, as compared with 33,418,000 last year, while the condition of the crop as reported June 1 was 87.8 of a normal as compared with 82 per cent for the corresponding period in 1910 and 80.9 per cent, the average condition for the past ten years.

While the growth of timber of the hardwood varieties is usually a mark of a fertile soil, it cannot always be relied upon as indicative of the character of the surface soil, as the roots of many trees penetrate deep. But where one finds clover growing naturally the evidence is quite conclusive that the soil is rich and also that it is sweet and does not need liming.

An experiment made recently by the department of agriculture for the purpose of testing the shrinkage in corn in storage showed that 28,000 pounds of shelled corn kept under ordinary conditions for a period of 147 days lost 1,970 pounds, or about 7 per cent, as a result of evaporation of moisture. Weighings made at frequent intervals showed that the corn gained in weight in wet weather and shrank correspondingly in dry.

A lot of farmers who do not live in territory usually termed semi-arid have been confronted with a pretty stiff dry farming proposition this year and out of it all may learn something that will stand them in good stead in the years to come. One of these lessons is the advantage of a very thorough preparation of the seed bed for small grain, also the harrowing of small grain to break the crust after it is up; secondly, the distinct advantage of a frequent and careful tillage of such crops as corn and potatoes.

The writer has seen some pretty effective execution done within the past few weeks with one of the gullitons or terror rat traps. Cheese, grain or a piece of meat makes excellent bait, but a small piece of bone with gristle attached and tied to the tongue of the trap is perhaps the best bait of all. Care should be used in setting the trap, for a blow that will break a rat's back or crush its skull is apt to break the bone of one's finger. While the campaign is being waged, the traps should be attended to daily, baited at night and emptied in the morning. Moreover, the traps should be placed so that neither kittens, chickens nor children can have access to them.

A number of state experiment stations are now offering courses in poultry management especially designed to fit men who desire to go into poultry farming for themselves. Among practical lines taken up are feeding, the use of incubators and brooders, anatomy and physiology of poultry, marketing various poultry products and poultry judging. There is little question that it would be time and money well spent for those planning to take up poultry raising on an extensive scale and possessing no previous experience to take just such a course. They would be able to secure instruction from experts and acquire experience in the business without the heavy losses that often accompany the early efforts of novices who take up the poultry business.

July and August are pre-eminently the two months in which joint roosting, drought defying pest, crab grass, gets in its work, often counteracting and rendering futile most of the good hoe and cultivator work done during May and June. It is fortunate that crab grass is an annual. This means that the root does not live through the winter and that to exterminate it all one needs to do is to keep it from going to seed. It is hard to overcome, for the reason that it makes most of its growth in corn, potatoes and other cultivated crops after they have been laid by; hence to get rid of it one must wage a persistent fight from now on by pulling and hoeing so as to keep any seed from maturing. This will require a lot of persevering work when the sun beats down hard, but the reward will be a clean garden next season.
