HIS CODE MESSE.

It Wasn't Quite So Mysterious as He Intended It to Be

The frequency with which revolutions occur in Latin America makes them "anybody's guess" and as a result of this many persons without experience either in code or in battle are likely at any moment to find themselves conspirators and traitors. One of these novices at the art of "revolving" is the hero of a tale which follows, a favorite in certain South American republics.

The novice in question, has suddenly acquired a violent dislike for the president of his native land, and away from home in a strange and enlisted in the revolutionary ranks. The next thing he knew he was detailed to raise troops in a distant district.

It was explained to him that must envelop all his acts in dark secrecy. In order the better to accomplish the revolutionary commander (the novice) that whenever he felted upon to pen a dispatch he must use it in the terms of a code, so that government officers might not guess the meaning of any dispatch if it fell into their hands.

The novice promised to follow instructions to the letter. A few days later he had collected a force of men and desired to acquaint revolutionary headquarters with the taking his copy of the code book. He was to be very careful, for the code book was the code word for soldier and "code" the one for rifle.

He sat down and wrote a dispatch. It fell into the enemy's hands. It was conceived in these cryptic terms: "I have the honor to report that we have 200 cows and 150 cigars, but cows have no shoes and the cigars bayonets."—New York Times.

A Good Work.

Edith was light hearted and merry over everything. Nothing appealed to her seriously. So one day her mother decided to invite a very serious young person to dinner, and he was placed next the light hearted girl. Everthing went well until she asked him: "You speak of everybody having a mission. What is yours?"

"My mission," said the person, "is to save young men."

"Good," replied the girl. "I'm glad to meet you. I wish you'd save me for me."

Two Wedding Texts.

John Quincy Adams and John Hancock, "the signer," married two sisters, the daughters of a noted Methodist divine in Connecticut. John Quincy was a favorite with the old people, and Mary's choice was approved by them. So when the banns were published the parent said, "Mary, if you will furnish the text I will preach you a wedding sermon." She was equal to the task and gave the text, "Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken from her." Needless to say that justice was done to the occasion and the text.

Not so with Margaret, who in the meanwhile was receiving the attentions of her John in a very inexpensive way, as far as her parents were concerned, for it is said that "he never crossed his legs under their festive board." So, when the banns were published she said to her father: "Father, you preached a wedding sermon for Mary. Cannot you preach one for me?" He at first demurred, but at last consented and called for the text, when Margaret, who was equal to the occasion, said, "And John came, neither eating nor drinking, and yet ye say he hath a devil."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Gave Him Due Credit. Sir James Scarlett, the great English lawyer, when practicing at the bar had to examine a witness whose evidence promised to be damaging unless he could be previously confused. The only vulnerable point of the man was said to be his self esteem.

"I HATE," REPLIED MR. TOMPKINS.

The witness, a portly, overdressed person, went into the box, and Scarlett took him in hand.

"Mr. John Tompkins, I believe?"

"Yes."

"You are a stockholder?"

"I am," replied Mr. Tompkins, with a pronounced cockney accent.

Scarlett regarded him attentively for a few moments and then said dryly:

"And a very large, well dressed man you are, sir."

The shout of laughter which followed completely disconcerted Mr. Tompkins, and the lawyer's point was gained.

THE ROCK PTARMIGAN.

A Bird of Storms and Ice, Raw Mists and Bleak Winds.

In order to make the acquaintance of the ptarmigan it is necessary either to journey into the snows and ice of the far north or to climb up to the very highest glacier valleys among the frozen peaks of the Rockies or Cascades, where circumpolar conditions are reproduced. While this curious bird is essentially a subarctic type, it is occasionally found among the isolated fields of eternal snow as far south as Colorado and northern New Mexico.

The rock ptarmigan is a bird of storms and ice and raw mists and bleak winds. In the summer gray as the rocks among which he lives, in winter white as the swirling snows in the midst of which he survives after every other feathered living thing, save only the fearless eagle, has fled to the lower valleys.

His brother, the willow ptarmigan, lives lower down by 500 or 1,000 feet, among the dwarfed shrubs which mark the upper edges of tree life, and, while similar in size and structure, is of a less somber plumage and more friendly disposition than the ghostly gray specter of the upper world, the rock ptarmigan. The males of the willow ptarmigan especially are beautiful birds, brownish gray upon the backs and wings, with rich reddish brown throats almost chestnut in color and dazzling white breasts.—Country Life in America.

Violins Old and New.

There is a general impression that very old violins and violoncellos are much superior in tone to similar instruments of modern construction. The point was debated by a number of Paris musicians, who decided in favor of the modern instrument. Six ancient violoncellos were chosen, including a Stradivarius, a Tickler, a Cappa, a Prassenda and a Guarnerius, together with six modern instruments. These were played alternately by Senor Casals, who was hidden from sight, the instruments being indicated to the jury by a number and marks awarded according to beauty of tone. The modern instruments aggregated 1,494 marks and the ancient instruments only 883, although the six ancient cellos represented a value of $6,000 and the modern ones $160.—London Express.

New York City's "same Fourth" is permanent institution, according to Mayor Gaynor. He has told Herman Alder, chairman of the celebration committee, that the $1,845 of surplus could be kept as a nucleus for a fund next year's doings.
