Enough to Know. Some pilgrims pass their hours in dull repining. The clouds are all they ever try to see. I only know the sun is often shining. And that's enough for me.

Some pilgrims wall: "The road is steep and dreary! The thorns are thick where roses fair should be!" I only know there's rest for all weary. And that's enough for me.

Some pilgrims moan: "The way is vague to heaven. And death ends all! The grave our goal must be!" I only know a promise has been given. And that's enough for me.

—Walt Mason.

Plain and Homely. "Last year," said an American woman writer who prides herself on her exquisite taste in dress, "I roamed through England. At one stop in the provinces we went to a boarding house. An English boarding house is a dire thing. The landlady cooks the food—at least she believes she cooks it—and brings it up to your room. And there are no carpets on the floor, and the windows are covered with horrible white shades, so that you have to tie a stocking over your eyes if you want to sleep late in the morning. Conditions are generally distressing. The landlady brought up my morning muffin and bacon and started her favorite topic of conversation—the rapid rise of a young actress who had boarded with her the year before. I was wearing a beautiful American tailor made dress, of which I was particularly proud. As I slipped my tea the landlady said: 'An' just to think—it was only a year ago as 'ow she was sittin' there in that very chair—and now she's a star. Never no hairs about 'er—w-y, she dressed just as pinyne and 'omely as you is now.'"—New York Times-Star.

Making It Pleasant. The hall resounded to the gentle tapping of dancing shoes upon the polished floor and the swish of silken skirts as ladies of various ages performed more or less graceful terpsichorean motions. Seated together in a corner were two men.

"Dye see that tall woman with the sharp nose and the vicious looking eyes?" said the first man.

"Well," went on the first speaker, "I've been watching her for quite a while. She's always got her nose in somebody's business. She's the last woman I'd marry."

The other man gazed at him with a look of admiration.

"Old chap," he said at length, "shake hands! You've just shown me how strangely in sympathy we are. That lady actually is the last woman I married."

Paid For His Nerve. A book agent once waited on Joseph G. Cannon in the house of representatives and interested him in an elaborate edition of something which Uncle Joe didn't want, but bought. When the books arrived Uncle Joe examined them and decided at once that something had been put over on him. When the agent came for his money the speaker determined to make him endorse a terse sentiment on books, so he wrote out a check for $73, the amount due, and on the back of it he inscribed:

"Pay to the order of Mr. Blank in full payment for an edition which was not worth a — and dear at that price, but for the ease and grace with which he put it over your Uncle Joe it was well worth twice the money."—Human Life.

Objected to Theology. Owen Seaman, editor of Punch, was the principal guest at a dinner of the London Authors' club recently, which was followed by a discussion on "Humor." Mr. Seaman began with a story deprecating the spoiling of a good dinner by any discussion at all.

There were three characters in the story, a bluebottle fly and two Scotsmen. The story at once struck a note of probability by showing the Scotsmen drinking whisky. The bluebottle buzzed on the pane; otherwise silence reigned.

This was broken by one of the Scotsmen trying to locate the bluebottle with zoological exactitude. Said the Scotsman:

"Sandy, I'm thinking if yon fly is a birdie or a beastie."

The other replied, "Man, don't spoil good whisky with religious conversation."
