An Inconvenient Piano.

Legend de Mayer of Dresden, a brilliant and popular pianist of his day, was once summoned to play before the king of Constantinople. Going thither, he borrowed a grand piano from one of the American secretaries of legation and had it set up in a large reception room at the palace. There he awaited the coming of the sultan, but when that intelligent monarch entered the room he started back in alarm and demanded of his attendants what that monster was standing there on three legs. Explanations followed, but were in vain. The legs had to be taken off and the body of the instrument laid flat on the floor, and Leopold de Mayer, squatting cross-legged on a mat, went through his program as best he could in that awkward attitude and without pedals. But the commander of the faithful was delighted, and when the last piece was played gave the artist over $5,000 as backsheesh.

Too Early.

One raw February morning an instructor in the University of Michigan was calling the roll of an 8 o'clock class in English.

"Mr. Robbins," said he.

"There was no answer."

"Mr. Robbins," in a slightly louder voice.

Still no reply.

"Ah," said the instructor, with a quiet smile, "come to think of it, it is rather early for Robbins."

The instructor was the late Moses Colt Tyler, who later became professor of history at Cornell, and it shows him in the pleasing light of a man who could be boyishly gay at a gray and cheerless hour—no small feat, if one stops to consider an instructor's provocations to morning dullness.

Missus—I see you broke my china plate in two. The Cook—This is my lucky day. I generally have to gather the pieces in a dustpan—Chicago News.

"How was it the thieves got away with that roll of carpet?"

"I suppose they beat it"—Baltimore American.

Jensen and the Voters.

Glerulf Jensen Saturday completed a week of campaigning in this country. In many respects it was a remarkable campaign—a series of heart-to-heart talks between candidate and voters. What that sturdy Danish-American with the kindly blue eyes and fighting chin had to say was listened to with the deepest attention by thousands of farmers and shop workers. There was no oratorical waving of the flag nor word pictures of beautiful Colorado sunsets. Glerulf Jensen and the crowds he spoke to were too much in earnest, too busy, for such antiquated political tricks.

On the face of every man and woman to whom the Progressive candidate for congress spoke was plainly written, "How do you stand? what do you believe in?"

Discarding preliminaries Jensen would answer this unvoiced query, "I believe in you. I stand on a party platform that believes in you; that is built around you. I am a candidate of a party that believes it is time for the great middle class of America to receive a square deal; that congress should cease legislating for the privileged few and pass many laws beneficial to that class which forms the bulk of the population of this country."

Simple platform, is it not? It can be described in a sentence, but it is so substantially constructed, its need so imperative, that Glerulf Jensen will be the next congressman from the sixth Indiana district.

That platform on which Jensen stands was constructed by the workers of America. It is the most splendid, most remarkable declaration of principles in the history of American politics. No politicians would have ever constructed such a platform because it is a menace to those sinister interests in whose service the leaders of both old parties have been working for years.

Glerulf Jensen came into Wayne county practically a stranger, but because of his own splendid personality and the principles he so sincerely advocates he has departed with the friendship and admiration of thousands of hard-thinking, patriotic Wayne county men and women.

An Egg Trust Remedy.

Dealers in this city predict that by mid-winter the price of eggs in this locality will be sixty cents a dozen—five cents per egg.

The reason generally assigned for the steady advance in the price of eggs is that the hens are not laying.

The reason generally believed is that eggs are being packed and stored and held against that time when fresh eggs are really hard to obtain. No matter what the real reason is, the fact remains that the consumer is designed to play the role of "goat."

Eggs are a household necessity and, consequently, considerable of a factor in the cost of living.

And there is a way to beat the egg trust without organizing an "egg strike," as attempted in several cities last winter. Here is the remedy:

In the rear of nearly every home in this city is a yard. Take a small section of that yard and construct a poultry plant. Place in this plant some good poultry stock and then it won't be long before you are reducing the butcher bills and having on the breakfast table plenty of eggs you positively know are fresh. Also in working around your poultry plant you will get fresh air and wholesome exercise and be able to forget business cares and worries.

The cost of starting your little poultry farm will be small. If you are handy with the carpenter tools you have out in the barn or the shed the cost will amount to only a trifle. You can stock your pen with six or eight hens and a rooster and they can be obtained for a few dollars.

Fall weather is an ideal time for you to start in the poultry business. This year's pullets are ready to lay, and if properly housed and cared for will keep on laying throughout the winter months. As a final suggestion, place your poultry plant where it will be reached by the sun.

If you get more eggs than your family can use there are plenty of envious flat dwellers who will buy the surplus.

A Necessary Lesson.

At the cost of four American lives the United States Marine Corps administered a wholesome and necessary lesson to the republic of Nicaragua and the other quarrelsome and combative nations in Central America.

For several years killing and torturing American citizens and burning American property has been a favorite pastime in Nicaragua and Honduras. For these outrages Uncle Sam has merely rebuked the offenders, which spineless policy has bred contempt for the American government among the natives of the two republics.

Now that Uncle Sam has shown the strength of his bared fist, the fighting qualities of his sea police, it is quite probable an American citizen can reside in Nicaragua or Honduras without announcing he is a British subject. Might is the only thing a Latin American respects. Hundreds of bullet-riddled Nicaraguan corpses on bloody Cabannas hill have driven home to Central America the might of the United States.

This Is My 39th Birthday

GEORGE CRAM COOK.

George Cram Cook, well known as an author, was born in Davenport, Iowa, Oct. 7, 1873. He spent three years at the University of Iowa and later engaged in higher studies at Harvard and the University of Heidelberg and the University of Geneva.

Since the completion of his education he has had a most diversified career. He has been a member of the greater part of Europe and upon his return to America he enlisted in the army for the Spanish war. He visited Mexico, taught school for a number of years and tried his hand at truck farming before settling down to a career of writing and political activities. Of late years he has made his home in his native city of Davenport, where he was a Socialistic candidate for Congress two years ago. Mr. Cook's best known literary works include "Glimpses of Florentine Art," "Evolution and the Superman," "Roderick Talferro" and "The Chasm."

Money and Marbles.

Once there was a man who thought Russell Sage ought to stop work. He spoke to him about it. "Why get together any more money, Mr. Sage? You can't eat it, you can't drink it. What good will it do you?"

"Ever play marbles?" Uncle Russell asked.

"Yes, when I was a boy."

"Couldn't eat 'em, could you? Couldn't drink 'em, could you? No use to you, were they? What did you play marbles for?"—Harper's.

A BUSINESS REVIEW OF THE PAST WEEK BY HENRY CLEWS

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—In spite of a temporary setback induced by disturbing news from the Balkans, the stock market showed a steady growth in underlying strength. Intrinsic conditions are sound. Business is daily becoming more active as the result of a splendid harvest. Practically all crops except cotton are beyond danger from frost. The yield has been large, larger in many cases than Government estimates, and the quality of most crops is exceptionally fine. Cotton is still two or three weeks backward and will not be entirely gathered for several weeks to come, but the deterioration in August was below the average. The danger from early frost has been practically escaped and the outlook is now more certain for a 14,000,000-bale yield.

A noticeable feature is the early marketing of the grain. Receipts thus far at interior points are more than double a year ago and far surpass all previous records. The effect of this prompt moving of the crops will be twofold. In the first place, it will release earlier than expected the large sums of money locked up in the West to carry grain, and such funds will return to the East correspondingly early. Secondly, early marketing of the crops will greatly stimulate retail trade. The agricultural sections will have money in hand and will not doubt spend more freely than if their funds were locked up in crops. This activity in trade will be reflected in a further revival of industry, also in railroad traffic. For some time past the railroads have been taxed to their utmost capacity in the handling of freight. Gross earnings are consequently showing handsome gains, and the returns for September, October and November should prove particularly gratifying after the lean period which the roads have been obliged to endure for the past year or two. This relief to the roads comes none too soon. Already company managers were seriously concerned as to the effect of large increases in costs for labor and materials which seriously impaired their ability to attract new capital. This latter consideration was fast bringing the railroads to a serious crisis. Their growing inability to procure capital, except on terms which they could ill afford, meant serious clipping in their facilities and consequent failure through no fault of theirs to properly serve the public. The recent gain in earnings will certainly afford partial relief. Nevertheless, the situation is one that demands serious and more impartial consideration from the Interstate Commerce Commission without unreasonable delay. Possibly when the elections are over the subject may be acted upon with less prejudice.

The money situation is also more satisfactory than a week ago. Funds withdrawn for October disbursements have already returned. In all probability the extreme rates witnessed last week will not be repeated for some time to come. A year ago we were lending money freely to Europe. At present we have full and profitable employment for all available funds. Nevertheless, firm rates are promised throughout the winter, and lending institutions generally are enjoying a period of exceptional prosperity. We have already taken $6,700,000 gold from Europe, and would have imported still more were it not for the outbreak in the Balkans and the fact that our needs are not urgent.

The Balkan situation is naturally taken much more seriously in Europe than here, having induced extensive foreign selling of American stocks, which were readily absorbed in this market. Europe appears to be always having its little war scares, but this Balkan situation is one of particular significance. It means that within the next fifty years important changes will be made in the map of Europe. The seat of controversy lies in a region where there is perpetual conflict between varied racial and religious prejudices. The people are warlike, and have suffered for generations from Turkish misrule. With changes in social and political ideals and with progress in science, education and economic conditions, general unrest has increased, as in other parts of the world and some sort of readjustment giving the numerous small States a more permanent and better government is inevitable. Until such results are attained, rest in this part of Europe is impossible. Change is inevitable. It may come through war. It may be that diplomacy will accomplish by peaceful methods what can only be attained at tremendous loss and suffering through conflict. At the moment conditions are unfortunately unfavorable to prolonged hostilities, because the winter is close at hand, and it is questionable if these minor principles will be able to raise the big sums of money necessary to carry on war against Turkey. Nevertheless, the question is one that will cause Europe considerable uneasiness, unless, as is hoped, a settlement can be reached through the influence of the Great Powers upon Turkey. The practical close of the war between Italy and Turkey will place the latter in a stronger position, and may thus check the aggressiveness of Turkish enemies in the Balkans.

Stocks have now risen between 5 and 10 points. The outlook is for even a more active and higher market. But the greater the advance the greater the temptations to realize, and it should not be forgotten that the market will then be peculiarly liable to a setback from any political development.

ment that might be construed as unfavorable to business interests. Just now public temper shows a gratifying quieting down compared with the irritation shown last winter and this summer. This is probably because the activity of business in general diverts the attention of all parties from political agitation, of which the people are more than weary. There is no subject upon which business interests are more sensitive at present than the tariff. This appears to be the only issue of great weight with either party. Both leaders have insisted upon the necessity of a revision downward, yet neither has outlined any definite tariff program. There is no doubt that the tariff can be amended in important respects without serious detriment to business affairs. But whatever changes are attempted should be carried out with the idea of affecting industry adversely as little as possible.
