

IS UNABLE TO HELP SHADE TREES HERE

State Entomologist Has Not Discovered Species of New Leaf Pest.

Richmond shade trees of the Norway and sugar maple varieties, will have to continue their battle against a new leaf pest unaided for the present by the state entomologist.

City Forester John F. Thompson, who recently sent specimens of leaves from Norway and sugar maple trees that had been injured by some unknown pest to the state entomologist, C. H. Baldwin, received word from him Tuesday that the maple tree pest had been noticed by its damage in several localities of the state, and that, so far, it had been impossible to discover the cause.

Mr. Baldwin stated that last summer specimens had been sent to Cornell university, where they have the best authorities in the country on shade tree trouble, and they were unable to determine definitely the cause. He said he would again take up the question with Cornell university, as well as with the United States department of agriculture.

The Norway maple is infested by some insect that bites off the leaves. According to Mr. Baldwin, this might be attributed to some beetle which, since it has never so far been discovered at work in the daytime, may be pursuing its destructive work at night. The trouble with the sugar maple trees is taking the form of patches of dead tissue in the leaves. Attempts to get fruiting spores from the diseased areas have so far resulted unsuccessfully.

City Forester Thompson is very anxious to have the cause of this particular shade tree trouble discovered so that it may be checked before serious damage is done to Richmond beautiful shade trees. He suggests that owners of Norway and sugar maple trees that show signs of the infection, observe their trees carefully and, if possible, obtain specimens of the pests that are responsible for the damage, and send them to him for examination.

U. S. Manufactures in Foreign Markets

(National News Association)

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The volume just issued by the Department of Commerce entitled "American Manufactures in Foreign Markets," is one that ought to be in the hands of every economist and in the files of every industrial association and chamber of commerce. It is the first time in which the facts respecting sales of American manufactures abroad have been put into such condensed form as to make the growth of our foreign trade clearly visible both in totals and in details and over a long period of years. The facts themselves have been printed before, but they have never been printed in the way in which they now appear.

It is but the lifetime of a man from 1852 to 1912, but in that one man's life the sales of manufactures abroad of all kinds have grown from 47 millions yearly to 1,300 millions yearly. To consider only manufactured goods other than foodstuffs, the ratio of increase has been even larger, for the foreign sales have jumped from 27 millions in 1852 to over 1,000 millions in 1912 and promise to be nearly on quite 1,200 millions for the full year of 1913, an increase of 133 per cent.

MAYOR WOULD HAVE FINED ROOSEVELT

Maintains That One Drink Is Sufficient to Bring About Conviction.

The question, "How much does it take to get drunk," again came up in police court this morning when LeRoy Wright, colored, was fined $1 and costs for taking one drink of whisky. White was arrested at the carnival grounds Saturday night by special officers for disorderly conduct but as he was found not guilty of that charge he was charged with public intoxication.

Wright was strolling around the carnival grounds Saturday night at 10:30 when the engineer of the merry-go-around stopped him and drew a revolver. Wright was then arrested and charged with having annoyed the carnival men by stealing rides on the merry-go-around and creating a disturbance in the vicinity of it. Witnesses proved that he had not taken part in any disturbance.

"If I were trying Theodore Roosevelt," said the mayor, "I found that he had taken one drink, he would be guilty of public intoxication." "How much does it take to get drunk?" he asked a colored boy.

"Right smart," said the boy but upon being asked to state definitely he said that the mayor of a city ought to know. Mayor Zimmerman's ruling for years has been that one drink of intoxicating liquor causes a man to be intoxicated according to Indiana state laws.

...A FACT OR TWO ABOUT DRY CLEANING...

A dry cleaner that knows how to clean clothes, knows that the customer wants the clothes clean. It does not make any difference how many processes they go through. Every lady knows that an expensive fabric of sensitive color will not stand 3 or 4 processes of cleaning. Where a heavy portier or rug would have to have three or four and sometimes more processes to get them thoroughly clean. We have worked at the cleaning business so long and handle so many garments that we know that the expert clear-brained dry cleaner takes a look at the article to be cleaned and cleans it accordingly.
