

MADAME CAILLAUX FAINTS AS LAWYER ASKS DEATH ORDER

Chenu Pictures Her as Assassin and Pleads for Execution on Guillotine as Terrible Penalty.

[BULLETIN]
PARIS, July 28.—The shadow of the guillotine was lifted from Madame Henriette Caillaux, slayer of Editor Gaston Calmette, this evening. In his closing speech against the defendant in the trial that has stirred for eight days, M. Herbaux, the public prosecutor, dropped the charge of premeditation and admitted that there were extenuating circumstances in the prisoner's favor.

PARIS, July 28.—Madame Henriette Caillaux fainted today while M. Chenu, counsel for the prosecution, was making a plea to the jury, asking for her conviction for the murder of Editor Gaston Calmette. She was carried from the court and the session was suspended while she received medical attention.

Her collapse came when Chenu pictured her as a cold-blooded assassin and demanded a verdict of guilty with death on the guillotine as the penalty. Great crowds besieged the Palace of Justice today for an opportunity to witness the final scenes in the dramatic trial of Mme. Henriette Caillaux for the murder of Gaston Calmette, editor of Le Figaro.

Armed republican guards stationed at the doors were rushed several times by the frenzied spectators, but succeeded in holding them back. Scores came to the building during the night and camped there in discomfort, but happy in having forestalled possible rivals.

Expect Murder Verdict.
The fate of Mme. Caillaux probably will be known before night. Betting on the outcome today was general.

It was influenced greatly by the course that her husband, ex-Premier Joseph Caillaux, had followed during the trial. The prevailing belief was that because of his injection of political issues into the trial the defendant could hope for nothing better than a verdict of "murder with extenuating circumstances."

Such a verdict would render her liable to two years' imprisonment. It would be materially lessened by the provisions of the first offender's act.

ITALIAN REFUSES TO READ LETTER

An Italian, John, living in this city, has the most unique idea of revenge on record.
Until a short time ago he lived in a house with a number of other Italians. When he moved he failed to notify the postoffice of his changed address, consequently letters from his family in the old country were delivered at his former address.

The boss of the little gang who ran the boarding house would open his mail and read it, after which he would send it to John. After this had happened two or three times John went to the postoffice with an interpreter to make a complaint. After stating the case the interpreter concluded by saying: "It just makes him so mad when the boss open and read his letter, John tear 'em up without reading."

MAY FIGHT DUELS AFTER WIFE'S TRIAL

That former Premier Joseph Caillaux, whose wife is on trial for the murder of Gaston Calmette, editor of Le Figaro, will demand satisfaction for the passing of a disgraceable remark by one of the attorneys in the case, is the belief expressed by his friends. Commenting on the testimony given by Caillaux, Maitre Chenu, who represents the Calmette family, said, "It does not become M. Caillaux to come here and endeavor to soil the grave which his wife made." On this remark, made at Mme. Caillaux's trial, the duel rumors are based.

SUCCEEDS CAMPBELL

Morse States Policy at Gaar-Scott.

To succeed William Campbell as superintendent of the Gaar-Scott branch of the M. Rumely company, G. Morse, of Battle Creek, Michigan, has been appointed to head the local branch of the company. He will take charge of affairs at Richmond, August 1.

Mr. Morse is now superintendent of the Battle Creek branch of the Rumely company. In a statement made yesterday by Mr. Morse, he said that very few changes would be made in the local plant with the change of management. The same policy that has been pursued by Mr. Campbell will be used by Mr. Morse in his management here.
