

POTATOES OF VALUE FOR STOCK FEEDING

If the present overplus of potatoes in the hands of the farmers cannot be disposed of for human food, they may be fed to farm animals, according to the authorities of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell. They point out that potatoes alone cannot be used to advantage as a feed, nor can they be used in any great quantity.

Potatoes are said to be best adapted to hog feed, but to secure the best results they should be cooked and should then be mixed with corn meal or other ground grains to form a thick mush. Skimmed milk added to this meal makes it more valuable. Potatoes are less than one-fourth the feeding value of corn meal. If their cost is as low as 15 cents a bushel they are still more expensive than silage; yet 5 cents a bushel for potatoes is said to represent a considerable loss to the farmer, who can scarcely produce them according to crop experts, for less than 30 cents. Still, it is pointed out that it is better to get this much value out of them than to have them a total loss.

worn. A flannel waist and skirt with ragged stocking and tattered shoes sufficed for the slavey role, while $5,000 was expended to dress the actress after the style of the great English queen.
