DODDRIDGE LITERARY SOCIETY PLAYS "DOLL HOUSE" BY IBSEN

BY CORA GATES.

DODDRIDGE CHAPEL, Sept. 10.—

The Doddridge Literary society closed its summer with a grand finale at the president's home Tuesday evening, Sept. 7. Despite the threatening weather about three hundred persons enjoyed the play, Ibsen's "A Doll's House," which took almost three hours to present. A stage was built on the lawn at the foot of the slope so that it made a natural amphitheatre and everyone was able to see and hear well. The characters were as follows:

Towald Helman, Otto Dailey; Nora, his wife, Otto Greene; Dr. Rank, Homer Bertsch; Mrs. Linden, Charlaine Burgess; Nils Krogstad, Everett Gates; the Helman's three children, Kenneth Flint, Lawrence Greene and Doris Doddridge; Anna, their nurse, Daphne Dailey; maid servant, Cora Spahr; porter, Howard Greene; coach, Clara Houseworth.

Henry Ibsen was a Norwegian author, and the first who dared to introduce the feminist idea. Although it was written in the Nineteenth century the problem is distinctly Twentieth century. Also, for the Nineteenth century, has grown the multitude of women who have learned that they can think for themselves; that they are human beings just as their husbands, fathers, brothers and sons, and that they have just as much right to an individual existence.

Nora has been treated like a doll by her father and husband. It appears they thought she had no brains, for she was never allowed to take any responsibility, even concerning minor household affairs. Towald, her husband, imagines he is most kind to her by treating her thus, but she grows tired of living in a gilded cage. When Towald's real character, his selfishness and egotism, is revealed in the third act, she frees herself from her doll house.

The leading lady, Miss Greene, stood out clearly as the strongest character in the cast. Her expression was most natural, at once highly dramatic, humorous and at times filled with pathos to the point of tragedy. Her manner on the stage was graceful and easy and although she had but the play, her lines were perfect.

Mr. Dailey showed much skill in the study of his character, for he made the domineering, selfish traits in Towald's disposition stand out clear and defined against the lovable, self-sacrificing.

Rev. Victor Leatherman filled the pulpit at the Brethren church Sunday evening.

Facing temperament of his little wife, Nora.

Mr. Gates could not be mistaken for other than the villain in the play, with his sneers, his sarcasm and his relentless will.

Mr. Bertsch showed no little talent in the study of his role. The pathos he brought into the play, picturing so clearly the desolate lot of a lonely doctor, hopelessly in love with Nora, and dying from a chronic disease, must not be passed without comment.

Miss Burgess, in her quiet, unassuming manner, at once won the admiration and sympathy of the audience, as she portrayed the lonely life of a widow who had married wealth for the sake of her mother and brothers, and rejected the true love, Nils Gragstad had offered her.

The children added a cheerful relief to the serious tone of the play, with their sunshine, artless game of hide and seek. Miss Dailey was most motherly in her care of them and afforded the audience no little amusement with her Irish brogue. Miss Spahr and Mr. Greene were prompt, business like and ready for service at the proper time.

Although the cast worked long and faithfully on the play, none of them spent any more time and energy than Miss Houseworth, the coach. The society has her to thank for the wonderful success of the play.
