REV. RAE REFUTES REPORTS OF LEAVING

Practically every seat in the auditorium was occupied at the morning service and at vespers Sunday in the First Presbyterian church when the first anniversary of the Rev. J. J. Rae's pastorate was observed with appropriate ceremonies.

The pastor in his annual sermon to the congregation at the morning service in speaking generally of the last year's work, discounted any belief that he was to leave the pastorate until the expiration of a reasonable time. He expressed his appreciation of the support which has been given him by the congregation.

Special music was rendered during the services and communion was observed before the close of the morning service. Last night under the auspices of the Young People's Sunday night club, the Rev. Mr. Rae gave a talk on Canada, illustrated with stereopticon views.

CALLS CONGREGATION TO MEET OBLIGATION

To decide upon a course of action having as its object the paying off of the indebtedness of the United Brethren church, a mass meeting of the congregation of that church has been called for tonight. Announcement of the meeting was made during the Sunday services by the pastor, Rev. H. S. James. It is proposed to obtain the money within the next ten days.

FORMER PROGRESSIVES Have the Right to Vote in the Republican Primary

The Republican County Committee of Wayne County has been in communication with the Republican State Central Committee in regard to the right of former Progressives to vote in the Republican primaries tomorrow, and has been authorized to issue the following statement and opinion as to the law given to the Republican State Central Committee by Addison C. Harris, James Bingham, former Attorney General, and Charles W. Miller, former Attorney General, which opinion is as follows:

"In our opinion as lawyers, it will not be a criminal offense for a former Progressive to vote at the Republican primary.

"Established principles and common sense forbid courts to aid by injunction the commission of crimes and require the plaintiff asking an injunction to show that his intended acts will not be unlawful and criminal but lawful and right. In Mote vs. Cassidy, 110 N. E. 987, the plaintiff, a former Progressive, intending to vote at the Republican primary, asked aid in doing so. The first question presented to the court was whether he intended to do what was criminal or what was lawful.

Court Says It Is Lawful.

"The Circuit Court (Judge Ewbank) decided that it was lawful and issued an injunction forbidding plaintiff's neighbor to interfere to prevent him. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment without any suggestion in its opinion that plaintiff's intended act would be a crime. That opinion, after stating that all objections to a former Progressive voting at a Republican primary, could be waived by the Republicans themselves, continued (Pages 993, 994): 'If the Republicans see fit to waive a challenge, may a Democrat, with whatever motive, interpose one and exclude him? If so, one of the purposes of the act—exclusion of opposition influence—will be defeated, for it happens that at every election many voters with the purest motives change their party allegiance..... Such waiver, contravenes no principle of public policy.'

"To say that in so deciding and using such language the Supreme Court also decided that plaintiff's vote at the Republican primary, which the extraordinary powers of the court were thus exerted to aid him in casting, would be a criminal offense, is an affront to common sense. Everybody knows that 'public policy' always forbids the commission of crime.

"No court ever did or ever will enjoin one man from preventing another to commit a crime, and the injunction in Mote vs. Cassidy was, in our opinion, based upon the primary principle in both the Circuit and Supreme Courts that it was not criminal, but was lawful, for a former Progressive, like the plaintiff, to vote at the Republican primary."

Signed,
ADDISON C. HARRIS,
JAMES BINGHAM,
Former Attorney General.
CHARLES W. MILLER,
Former Attorney General.

At the meeting of the Republican State Central Committee on last Friday it was impressed on those present that if a voter asks for a Republican Ballot no one can challenge the right of such voter to affiliate with that party except a Republican.
