

THE SANDMAN STORY FOR TONIGHT

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York.

Mrs. Squirrel was sitting outside her door one morning knitting socks for her little ones to keep their toes warm the coming winter when Mr. Fox came along.

"Good morning, Mrs. Squirrel," said he. "How are you this fine morning?"

Mrs. Squirrel told him she was well and hoped he was the same. "Won't you sit down awhile, Mr. Fox?"

Mr. Fox said he would be pleased to do so, and then he began to speak about Mrs. Rabbit, who lived down the path. "She is not much like you, Mrs. Squirrel," said Mr. Fox. "She does nothing all day long but sit in a chair and read."

"How her husband can let her be so idle I cannot understand," said Mr. Fox. "Why, she never even mends a pair of socks for her little ones."

"Perhaps he was going hunting," suggested Mrs. Squirrel. "One cannot wear good clothes hunting, I am sure."

"Oh, that is all very well for you to make excuses for Mrs. Rabbit, but he is not only neglectful of her family, but of her house as well. Why, I just looked in her back windows and passed. You know I told you she was sitting in front of her house, so she did not see me, and if you believe her words were not made, I doubt very much if Rabbit's dinner is ready when he returns this noon. Oh, it is just awful the way some people waste their time. Now, when I have anything to do, I start right off and do it, and I am sure you do, too, Mrs. Squirrel, don't you?"

Mrs. Squirrel answered very quietly that she sometimes had to put off doing things just as every one did at times.

"Well, I never do," began Mr. Fox again. "No, Mrs. Squirrel, I never put off until tomorrow what can be done today. I wish more people in the world were like me. The world would go much smoother, Mrs. Squirrel, much smoother."

Mrs. Squirrel did not reply. She knitted faster than she had been, and Mr. Fox began again.

"Now, Mrs. Squirrel, I hold that Mrs. Rabbit is wasting her time willfully waiting her time, when she should be working to help her husband."

"She may have a good reason for not waiting this morning," said Mrs. Squirrel, "and as for helping her husband, I know she does help him a great deal, and I think there are some husbands who help their wives, but there are also some who do not. You have talked a great deal of the faults of Mrs. Rabbit and she is not present to defend herself," said Mrs. Squirrel, stopping her knitting a minute and looking hard at Mr. Fox, "but how about yourself—have you none of the faults with which you charge my friend?"

"Why, Mrs. Squirrel, how can you ask such a thing? I have just told you I never waste time. I always do what I start out to do," said Mr. Fox in an injured tone.

"Well, be that as it may," said Mrs. Squirrel, beginning to knit again, "all I have to say is this, it is time enough to talk about the faults of our friend when we have none of our own to talk about."

"Oh, here you are, you lazy fellow!" said a voice which made Mr. Fox jump, and Mrs. Fox came around the corner of the house with a long stick in her hand.

"Here, I sent you to market an hour ago, and I have been waiting all this time for the flour and eggs; you never do a thing but waste time. Now you hurry or you know what you will get when you get back."

"ZOE" The Story of a Great Love

A Thrilling Serial of Devotion and Mystery

A very unsatisfactory chat in the palatial smoking room—unsatisfactory from Lemonvale's point of view, and an exchange of whiskies-and-sodas completed the evening. Brooke, looking at his watch for about the twelfth time, took the plunge.

"Awfully sorry," he said, "I'm afraid I must be off."

"Oh, but not so soon. It's only half-past ten."

Brooke apologized cheerily.

Excuse and Goes.

"Correspondence," he said vaguely. "Supper engagement. I ordered my car to be round at ten."

Five minutes afterwards Godfrey Brooke was driving himself down Pall Mall, the drenched chauffeur sitting gloomily by his side.

"Bad storm—eh?" remarked Brooke.

"Awful, sir," said the man. "Lightning struck Doulton's chimney, I hear, sir. Very bad down Chelsea way."

"Pshaw!" grunted Brooke. "You don't know what a storm is in this little country."

An evening paper contents bill informed the world that a woman had been struck dead by lightning in South Lambeth and that Westminster Abbey was reported damaged.

"Humph!" remarked Brooke.

"What's one woman in a great city?" "Yes, sir," said the chauffeur, deferentially, "of course, sir. Still, one life may mean a lot to someone, you know, sir."

"Bosh!" said Brooke. "Sentimental bosh! I'm not taking personal considerations in the argument. One can't think of sons and daughters when one talks of thunder storms. Snooks."

"No, sir; of course not; nor wives, neither."

"As you say, 'nor wives neither.' But here we are."

They swung slowly into the Savoy courtyard, and Brooke felt his heart beat faster. In another minute or two his wife, his little Dolly, would be in his arms.

What a wonderful thing was love! "Her ladyship," said a gorgeously arrayed hall porter to Brooke as he alighted from his huge motor car, "was called away unexpectedly, and she asked me to tell you that she would not be back till very late."

Brooke's disappointment was plainly shown on his face.

"Don't bother. There's no letter from her ladyship?"

"None, sir."

"Good!" Then say, when her ladyship returns, that I have gone round to have a chat with Mr. Crawley. I shall be back very soon."

"Very good, sir."

Brooke Goes Round to Call on Crawley.

And so Collier returned to his study of Venetian windows and Louise Berenger slept the sleep of the just in her room.

It was just then about 11 o'clock. He went outside and spoke to his chauffeur.

"I'm going to drive round to Mr. Crawley's," he said. "I won't keep you. I'll leave the car here afterward. I shall want you at 11 tomorrow."

Snooks was relieved, though he answered deferentially enough that he would accompany his master if he wished it and that time was of no account to him; but Brooke had the mind to drive by himself tonight.

He was disappointed at finding Diana out. For the moment it upset his plans; and perhaps, if the truth were known, he felt not a little annoyed. At any rate, he would go round to Crawley's studio and vent his annoyance on his old friend. It was his privilege, and it would do him good. Moreover, there were several things he wanted to discuss with him, and the present was surely the most fitting opportunity.

He bade Snooks good-night, and drove the car down the hill on the embankment, then, at rather a reckless pace, to Grosvenor road.

Lights gleamed from Crawley's windows. Brooke observed them with a certain sense of satisfaction. He would have been very annoyed to have been disappointed a second time tonight. Moreover, he was beginning to feel a very keen desire for a little social intercourse over a whiskey-and-soda. He quite looked forward to seeing Noel Crawley.

He stopped his engines, threw a waterproof rug over the seat, and, scornful of the aid of the lift, ran up flight after flight of steps to Crawley's front door, on which he gave a resounding tattoo of knuckle raps and then rang the bell.

There was no answer. He waited fully two minutes. Still no answer. He repeated the tattoo, and kept his thumb on the ivory button of the electric bell for half a minute, but still without result. Yet outside he had seen lights in the great bow window of the studio and from the other windows; while here a light shone through the faint light over the front door.

"What on earth is he up to?" muttered Brooke, stepping back and regarding the closed door with quizzical curiosity. "Rum chap, Crawley! He's always up to some mysterious game!"

"Suppose I'd better give it up as a bad job," he said disgustedly. "Hang it all, my luck is out tonight, with a vengeance."

Simply get an ounce of othine, double strength, from your druggist and apply a little of it night and morning, and in a few days you should see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the light ones have vanished entirely. Now is the time to rid yourself of freckles, for if not removed now they may stay all summer, and spoil an otherwise beautiful complexion. Your money back if othine fails.

QUICK RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Get Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

That is the joyful cry of thousands since Dr. Edwards produced Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards, practicing physician for 17 years, and calomel's old-time enemy, discovered the formula for Olive Tablets while treating patients for chronic constipation and torpid liver.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do not contain calomel, but a healing, soothing vegetable laxative.

No griping is the "keynote" of these little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablets. They cause the bowels and liver to act normally. They never force them to unnatural action.

If you have a "dark brown mouth" now and then—a bad breath—a dull, tired feeling—sick headache—torpid liver and are constipated, you'll find quick, sure and only pleasant results from one or two little Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets at bedtime.

Thousands take one or two every night just to keep right. Try them. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.
