

Official Bureau Describes Queen

The Official Press Bureau has issued a new story of Queen Alexandra, mother of King George. It tells of her fearlessness of Zeppelins.

"Queen Alexandra has very quietly shown the women of England that she, at least, has no fear of the Zeppelin terror. Her Majesty has been overworking lately in her duties as patron of the British Red Cross Society, and visitor at countless military hospitals, and her doctors advised a short rest and a complete change. Queen Alexandra has lived in London almost continuously since the beginning of the war.

"Her Majesty at once decided to go to Sandringham, which is in Norfolk, one of the counties most likely to be raided by Zeppelins, and by doing so she has quietly shown an example of womanly courage and indifference which has evoked the warmest admiration.

"Queen Alexandra was fully occupied with her hospital visiting until she left London, and on the last day of her rounds she did a characteristically thoughtful act. Talking with a man who had reached the hospital only a few hours before her visit, she learned that he could not sleep. 'Do you read?' she asked. 'I have not seen a book for months, ma'am,' he replied. Queen Alexandra opened her handbag and took from it a little volume beautifully bound in red leather. 'I'll give you this,' she said. 'It has soothed me when I was restless.' And she handed the wounded soldier a book of private devotional readings—one of her constant companions.

"Other wounded soldiers looked hungrily at the Queen. She shook her head to one of them and said: 'I've only one copy of that book, but I'll send you something else.' And the next day little rest pillows and walking sticks and cigarettes arrived—enough for every wounded man in the hospital.

AMUSEMENTS AT LOCAL HOUSES

MURRAY

Earle S. Dewey and Mabel "Billie" Rogers who are this season with "Around the Town" E. P. Churchill (Inc.) latest musical comedy production, are adding to their already great popularity in every theatre in which this new tabloid is presented. David M. Tolff, the author of the book and lyrics has been a great admirer of Mr. Dewey for some time past, and when commissioned to execute this work (was able to add bits of personal dialogue that is not often an author's good fortune to put over.

The music by Ray Peabody is in this talented young composer's best spirit, and contains several numbers destined to be on every piano before the season is over.

"Around the Town" comes to the Murray theatre tonight, Friday and Saturday.

WASHINGTON THEATRE

Commencing today the entire program of acts changes at the Washington with the exception of Lottie Mayer and her Diving Girls.

Tomorrow evening a diving contest of local swimmers will be held in connection with this act and the one receiving the most popular vote from the audience will be presented with a silver loving cup. Any one wishing to enter this contest may do so by notifying the management.

Along with this act the following bill will be presented: Joseph Remington & Co., in the comedy sketch, "A Millinery Salesman." This act will give everyone what they are looking for "A Good Laugh." Hawley & Boltaire follow in a refined singing and talking skit, "333." Next Howard and Graf appear in a singing playlet, followed by Ogden & Benson, "A pleasing pair from Songland."

KELLY TELLS PURPOSE

"The purpose of a college education is not only to train a young person to see the big things of life but it is to train him to see the little and minute things as well," said President Robert L. Kelly at chapel services at Earlham yesterday morning.

"The observance of little things is a necessity of success."

FARMERS HULL CLOVER

NEWPARIS, O., Nov. 2.—Farmers are bending every energy to finish their corn during these fine Indian summer days, and are making good progress. Clover hulling and corn shredding are also taking much of their time.

Of English invention for convalescents is a stout cane, from one end of which can be unfolded a projection to rest a user's foot.

NULL WILL ADVOCATE CHANGE FOR STUDY OF LITERATURE

"Our whole system of teaching literature is wrong, we simply skim over it, instead of living it," said Professor Benjamin Null of the high school English department. Mr. Null further announced that he proposed to use his influence to have the Eastern method of teaching introduced into the Indiana schools and that he would have a demonstration before the Indiana Teachers' association at the meeting next year.

Mr. Null was recently elected president of the English section of the state association. During his special course at the Powers School of Oratory near Boston last summer, Professor Null became convinced that the Eastern system of instruction opens more of the faculties to the study of literature and thus makes a definite and more permanent impression upon the student.

Should Live Literature

"We give a boy a poem or a story full of thrills, put him in the corner and order him to be quiet, when the piece really calls to him to spring into action and to live it. By the Eastern method the voice and the body are both brought into play. They interpret what they study with the voice and the body until when they read Paul Revere's ride or a drama or a short story, they live it. Such a plan of study makes literature a most thoroughly pleasant and beneficial course."

Prof. Null has discussed his new conception with Superintendent Giles.
