Our Educational Training Systems

We have frequently called attention to the necessity of giving the boy and girl a rigorous training in the fundamentals of learning. No boy or girl faces the future with a greater handicap than if the school system has not impressed upon his mind indelibly the salient points in arithmetic, spelling, grammar, geography, history and literature. These branches ought to be taught so thoroughly that the boy or girl need never regret the early years spent in the grammar schools. If these important subjects are not taught so that they will "stick" for life, we believe the school system has failed to do its full duty to the individual pupil and to the state in which the youth will reside.

In the November issue of Scribner's Magazine, Pearce Bailey, M. D., has an article entitled "Looking Youth in the Face." Part of it is reproduced with the hope that readers will obtain the magazine and read the article.

"We seem to cherish the agreeable hypothesis that all our boys and girls grow up equal, that all are first-class, and all alike fitted for the intense and varied requirements of modern life. On this hypothesis we plan complacently our educational and training systems. The disparity between what we wish for and what we get comes out soon enough, but not until the results are past remedying, or if remediable, have already involved great economic loss.

"The proof of the error in our original hypothesis is furnished by the large numbers of persons who fail hopelessly, by those who waste time and money in changing occupations before they find one suited to them, by those who never find occupations in which they do well enough to be entirely independent. In the State of New York, with a population of nine and one-half millions, there are nearly three hundred thousand persons who are registered every year as unable to take care of themselves, either by reason of physical disability, mental defects, or criminality. For every one whose inefficiency leaves him stranded on State or private charity, there are doubtless three or four who, though practically of no constructive use, have escaped registration. It would perhaps, not be far out of the way to assume that ten per cent of the adult male population of this State are, for some reason or other, and for shorter or longer periods, in a position of approximate if not absolute economic dependence.

"The percentage of failures in our colleges is extravagantly large. It is least where the requirements for entrance are high. Seventeen per cent of one class was dropped from the academic department of an Eastern university well known for its rigid entrance examinations. In one of the best American schools of technology, not more than forty out of every hundred men entering receive diplomas at the end of four years. A recent review of ten consecutive classes in fourteen American colleges showed as an average result that from twenty per cent to twenty-two per cent of freshmen do not become sophomores and that from sixteen per cent to eighteen per cent of sophomores do not become juniors."

Compete for Hardware Markets

Japan has become a rival of the United States in supplying hardware to Australia during the war, says Commercial Attache William C. Downs in a report on Australian hardware markets just published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. "The exclusion of many makes of European goods from the Australian markets and other eastern countries has stimulated the Japanese to great activity in an endeavor to capture the trade thus thrown open," the report states. "Whether it will be able to develop its production of tools and general hardware of the cheaper classes to a point that will satisfy the British tastes and requirements of Australia remains to be seen, but it is to be expected that a certain amount of trade will go to Japan. While this new competition may not seriously affect American trade in articles already well introduced, it may tend to limit expansion in the sale of lines of goods not largely exported in the past from the United States."

Mr. Downs lays particular stress upon the size of the Australian hardware markets considering the population and upon the fact that it is one of the few markets in the world where hardware other than English and American has never been an important factor.

PRINCE ENTERS TRAINING TO PREPARE TO REIGN

Prince George Edward, fourth son of King George and Queen Mary, although he is not yet fourteen until December 20, has already commenced the strenuous work of a man by entering as a cadet the Royal Naval College at Osborne, to be trained as a future officer of the Royal Navy.

Prince George, by entering the Navy of Edinburgh, an Admiral of the Fleet, and an extremely capable seaman. In the Navy he was known as "Happy Jack," on account of the tactful manner with which he maintained discipline without resorting to punishment, and his delight in violin playing.

King George is a thoroughly trained seaman. "What he doesn't know about a ship isn't worth knowing," say the sailors who have served under him, and they are no bad judges. King George is competent to take over the command of an Atlantic liner, or to take the place of a tramp steamer at a moment's notice. He is also an efficient gunner.

His second son, Prince Albert, who was mentioned in dispatches for gallantry in the Battle of Jutland, is also a highly capable seaman.

NARDO AND THE BIRD
Once upon a time a hunter named Nardo was hunting birds in the woods and just as he was about to fire a shot at a pretty bird sitting on a limb of a tree, to his surprise, the bird spoke to him in human language.

"Good hunter, Nardo," it said, "pray spare me, I have five little ones in a nest in this tree, and if you will promise not to harm us I will teach them to always remember your kindness to me, and also will help you if ever you are in trouble."

Nardo, the hunter, laughed when he heard this. "Why, how can such a little creature as you help me?" he asked.

"That I cannot tell now, good hunter," Nardo said, "but small creatures have before this helped bigger ones. Spare me, I pray you."

"Very well, I will grant your wish," replied Nardo, "but I will release you from your promise now, for I know full well you will never be able to render me any help."

The bird went back to her little ones, and the hunter went on through the woods looking for game.

The mother bird grew old and died, but the young birds followed Nardo wherever he went, and one day he went a long distance from their woods into a forest where there were wild beasts.

Nardo hunted all day, but not a chance did he get to shoot a lion or a tiger, and when night came he found a place back of a big rock where he was sheltered and went to sleep.

In the morning when he awoke he was frightened so his hair stood straight, for looking at him from the top of the rock was a lion. Nardo did not dare to move his hands to get his gun, which was a little distance from him and the lion, with his eyes fixed upon poor Nardo, came down from the rock and stood close beside him.

Swinging his tail and showing his teeth, the lion still gazed at Nardo, who thought every minute would be his last, and finally the lion put his front paws on Nardo's chest.

Just as he did this Nardo saw a bird fly toward them with a twig held in its bill.

Closer and closer it came until it was right over the head of the lion, and with the twig swinging from its bill it tickled the nose of the fierce lion until he had to jump away from Nardo to scratch his nose.

Quick as thought Nardo reached for his gun and before the lion could again attack him Nardo shot him and over rolled the beast at his feet.

Then Nardo looked for the bird that had saved his life and on a limb of a tree over his head he saw it.

"You are a very little creature, but you saved my life that time," said Nardo.

"You saved mine many years ago by sparing my mother's life," answered the bird, "and we have never forgotten it." And away it flew, leaving Nardo to think over what the old mother bird had said long before, that little creatures were often able to help the big ones, and Nardo knew she was right.

"I'll never again harm the birds," he said, "nor will I despise those who are smaller than I am, for sometimes wisdom is contained in small bodies while the big ones may have very little."

Break a Child's Cold By Giving Syrup of Figs

Cleanses the Little Liver and Bowels and They Get Well Quick.

When your child suffers from a cold don't wait; give the little stomach, liver and bowels a gentle, thorough cleansing at once. When cross, peevish, listless, pale, if can't sleep, eat or act naturally, if breath is bad, stomach sour, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the clogged-up, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

If your child coughs, snuffles and has caught cold or is feverish or has a sore throat give a good dose of "California Syrup of Figs" to evacuate the bowels no difference what other treatment is given.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure. They also know a little given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly or the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company."—Adv.

PREDICT MILD WINTER

COLUMBUS, Ind., Nov. 2.—Contrary to the belief expressed by those who have watched the early migration of wild geese, many sign-readers here believe the coming winter will be mild. They say the fur of coons, possums, muskrats and mink is much lighter and of poorer quality this fall than usual, which is always an indication that there will not be any severe weather.

Examine Your TEETH Tonight

—after you clean them.

You will find, in all probability, an accumulation of tartar on the enamel and bits of food deposit hiding between the crevices. YOUR DENTIFRICE does not FULLY CLEAN! Loss of teeth is caused usually by one of two conditions—Pyorrhea or decay, both of which develop, as a rule, only in the mouth where germ-laden tartar is present.

SENRECO, the recently discovered formula of a dental specialist, is two-fold in its action. First, it REALLY CLEANS, embodying specially prepared, soluble granules unusually effective in cleaning away food deposits. Second, it is particularly destructive to the germ of Pyorrhea. Yet it is perfectly safe, containing neither injurious chemicals nor hard grit.

Avoid Pyorrhea and decay. Get Senreco from your dealer today. In large tubes, 25c. Send 4c to Senreco, 304 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, for liberal-sized trial package.
