Greek Reactionaries Spread Tale That American Fleet Was to Help Put Constantine Back

ATHENS, Sept. 29.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The proclamation of martial law, which is now in force by royal decree, has been adopted by the government as a means of dealing with the elements which continue to agitate in behalf of the old royalist regime of King Constantine.

It is a drastic measure, suspending the constitutional guarantees of free speech, speedy trial and placing the capital and the section of southern Greece comprised in Africa and Boetia in a state of "very serious" and the military instead of the civil authorities the safeguarding of public order.

On the abdication of Constantine most of his ministers and chief officers were exiled or deprived of their functions. But it was impossible to make a clean sweep of all those friendly to the old regime, and many of the leaders including prominent military men, remain at Athens. It is said they held meetings at two points, one at Kaphissia, a suburb, and the other at Athens, where plots are hatched and the eventuality of Constantine's return looked forward to.

In New King's Train.

While the new administration has a firm hold of affairs, and is in complete accord with the Entente Allies, yet the Entente officials feel there is still a danger in the old military element which continues to agitate with the public, and is even said to have some of its representatives in the entourage of the new king.

Martial law is expected to reach these military plotters. It is also expected to put a stop to the flood of sensational rumor which keeps the ignorant classes and the peasantry in a continual state of unrest, with the evident purpose of making them believe that a German victory and the return of Constantine are near at hand.

Some of these reports were of the fall of Verdun, the flight of the French government from Paris, and a separate peace by Russia. The government and the allied diplomats are satisfied that all this is part of a systematic campaign by which the Central Powers are operating through the element favorable to the late king.
