THE STRUGGLE

CUTTING LOOSE
A few days after Bonanza Copper had fallen to 2 and had shocked the Ferris into a feeling of insecurity in their new-found ease it rose again to 4. But John Ferris had had his lesson, or had learned it partially. He was not going to stake all his hope or even most of it on what stock gambling brought him. His effort in his own line of gain was the only dependable source of support for a man with a family, he now felt. Bonanza Copper and its kind might be good enough as a side issue, but his serious thought belonged to his work of selling for his firm.

But that work was not bringing increases to his earnings as fast as the soaring cost of living was taking away. Ferris told Edith he meant to ask his employer for a raise again. This time he would not stand for a refusal.

"But if he should refuse, you must not anger him!" Edith warned him nervously.

"We'll see about that!" Ferris said darkly.
"Jack, you mustn't risk your position!" Edith cried, her womanly instinct toward caution aroused.
"Edith, I mustn't risk my self-respect!" he said impatiently. "I shall ask him only for what I am entitled to—no more. If he refuses—well, I am not a cripple. There are other publishers. I don't have to go without a position!"

"Oh, but you've been with Harmon so long, Jack! You're sure of your job with him, and—"

"Leave it to me, dear!" Ferris silenced her by challenging her trust in him.

Although his experiences with Bonanza Copper had startled Ferris into a stronger sense of dependence on his job, it had also given him a stronger sense of independence in another respect. He felt now that there was more than one way of making a living, and that there was more than one place he could work even at the business he knew.

It was not in too humble a mood, therefore, he entered Harmon's office next day.

"I've come to ask you again, Mr. Harmon, to let me have an increase in my pay," he said. "Since you gave me the last raise the cost of things has gone up at least ten per cent."

His chief looked sharply at Ferris. There was an unfamiliar note of insistence in his employee's voice he did not like.

"Come to me in the fall about it!" he snapped. "This is too soon after the last raise I gave you."

"I can't afford to wait so long, Mr. Harmon," he said firmly. "The increase in the cost of living has more than eaten up the raise. We feel the increase in cost very sharply, my family and I."

Mr. Harmon turned to him. "Ferris, until this moment it was none of my business what you spent on your clothes and your pleasures. Now it is—and I'm suggesting that you can't be suffering much when you can afford to buy clothes that I myself can't afford. Furthermore, you've been dining and winning your customers in a way none of our other men do—"

"All in the way of business, Mr. Harmon," Ferris answered, coloring.

"It may be. The other night, however, I saw you entertaining a party in a box at the theatre and at a costly restaurant afterward. You will forgive me for seeming unresponsive to your plea, but I cannot let you have what you ask!"

Ferris rose. "Very well, then, Mr. Harmon!" he said angrily. "I shall leave!"

Mr. Harmon nodded shortly. "Tell that to the cashier and he'll settle with you at once. Good day!"

Ferris had asserted his manhood—and lost his job!

Heart Home Problems

by MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl, very anxious to do my bit for Uncle Sam, but I want to do more than observe all the eatless and meatless days, etc. I want to go "over there" and work among our boys. I have no near relation in the army or navy. I am a good, strong, healthy girl, and not afraid of a good day's work. It is impossible for me to become a nurse or I surely would be one now. But isn't Uncle Sam looking for girls? Isn't there anything we can do? Couldn't I be a canteen worker?

This is no silly notion that has just entered my head. I have thought it over for some time, and I am sure whatever I would be found best fit for I would do my best at. Isn't there something I can do over there?

MAID IN AMERICA.
Go to Red Cross Headquarters and get advice. After meeting you and talking to you they may be able to use you in war work "over there." Do not build your hopes too high, however, because very few of the girls who want to go over are fortunate enough to be accepted. You can do real actual war work here if you are not satisfied with doing your duty on "less" days.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am twenty-two years old and I am engaged to a soldier who is going to France soon. He wants me to marry him and I have almost consented, but my parents keep me back because they object so much. They are the best of parents and they have always made my home so happy that I do not wish to disobey them if I can help it. My fiancé says he knows he will come back safe if he only has the love of a wife to protect him. Since he feels this way it breaks my heart to refuse to gratify his wish when he is risking his life for us back here.

Do you think it would be wrong to marry him in spite of the wishes of my mother and father?

I would continue to live at home and to earn my own living as I have been doing for almost three years.

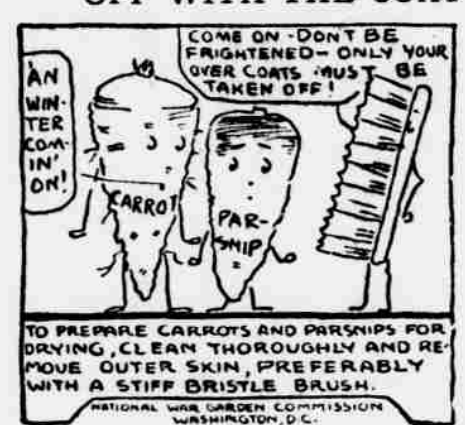

MARGARETTA.

Ask your fiancé to wait for you to marry him until he returns from war. He can take your love with him whether it is the love of a sweetheart or the love of a wife. Since you expect to make your home with your parents, you should respect their wishes. I, too, think it would be very unwise to marry now.

SUES FOR PERSONAL DAMAGES.

EATON, O., Sept. 7.—Edward Shaffer filed a damage action in common pleas court against Ida Campbell, in which he seeks $387.50 for personal injuries and for damage done his motorcycle in an accident. Shaffer claims an agent of the defendant crowded him off the road with a truck and resulted in wrecking his motorcycle. Injuries to his face will result in a permanent scar, Shaffer avers. He claims it cost him $37.50 to have his motorcycle repaired.

U. S. CELEBRATES LAFAYETTE DAY

(By Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—The 161st anniversary of the birth of the Marquis de Lafayette and the fourth anniversary of the first battle of the Marne were celebrated jointly in New York today by a series of patriotic exercises. The French tri-color was liberally displayed throughout the city.

Meetings were held at the Lafayette Statue in Union Square, on the Central Park Mall and at City Hall. French sailors and a detachment of United States soldiers from Governor's Island stood guard at the Lafayette statue.

School children in costume commemorated the day by marching through Central Park and singing the Marseillaise and other songs. Among those expected to speak at City Hall late today were Jules Jusserand, the French ambassador, and Col. Theodore Roosevelt.

Arrangements were made for twenty-four American and French airplanes to fly over the city during the city hall exercises and drop "Lafayette Day" greetings.

"I saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised so I sent for a free sample. I afterwards bought more and when I had used a little over a box of Ointment and two cakes of Soap I was healed." (Signed) Miss Pearl Anderson, Medford, Minn., August 6, 1917.
