THE STRUGGLE

BY ZOE BECKLEY

THE TABOO. At John Ferrol's words Mrs. Fenn turned with a cry to her son. He was standing white and quaking before them.

"Mummy, must Jackie not play with me? Must we move away again?" Mrs. Fenn asked him in her arms and was taking him into the house when Edith stopped her.

"No, Danny," Edith said compassionately. "Jackie will always play with you and you need not move away!"

To Edith's dismay, Mrs. Fenn sank to the porch step with the boy in her arms and seizing Edith's hand she closed her own tightly over it, while tears streamed down her cheeks.

"I'll never forget you, never till I die—" she stammered with quivering lips.

Fenn gently raised her to her feet. "She is the kindest woman in the world, Martha!" he said. "That is why we mustn't make her pay for her kindness. Her husband doesn't want us to have anything to do with them, and we don't want to cause disagreement between them."

John Ferrol turned irresolutely away. "It isn't that I personally care," he said lamely. "Only I know that the neighborhood will taboo my wife and children."

"How can you say such a thing?" "Yes, Mrs. Ferrol, he is right!" Fenn said bitterly. "We know it from experience. Those who would befriend us have had to pay for it with the good will of the other neighbors."

"I don't believe it! And I should not care if it turned out to be true!" Edith insisted. "My children shall play with Danny."

The Ferrols said no more to each other until they returned home. Then Ferrol turned to her.

"Edie, what you or I think of the Fenns is not the important consideration," he said. "The question is, are you willing to give up the friendship of the whole town for that of the Fenns? You will find that it will have to be one or the other."

"And I tell you, John, I don't believe people are so narrow hearted as all that!" Edith exclaimed.

"You don't know, Edie. You forget how terribly notorious these people were!"

"It's what they are now that I care about," she cried. "And for what they are I shall stand by them and see that their child isn't punished for something his parents were before he was born! They have more than squared accounts with the world! I don't believe the women and men of this town will feel otherwise. If they do—"

Edith answered it. "Is this you, Mrs. Ferrol?" a woman's voice asked excitedly. "This is Mrs. Carter speaking. Oh, have you heard who your neighbors are? A man came down to the club just now and has told us all about them! He's the brother of the man with whose wife—"

"I know all about it, Mrs. Carter!" Edith said. "But it really does not concern us, does it?"

"Doesn't concern us? Why, good heavens, Mrs. Ferrol, our children will meet their child!"

"My boy is playing with their child at this minute," Edith said quietly.

There was a pause. Then Mrs. Carter's voice resumed coldly.

"Well, Mrs. Ferrol, my Dickie was to come down to your house this afternoon to play with your boy. But under the circumstances, however, I shall keep him home. Of course, if you wish to have your little boy come up to my house—"

"No, Mrs. Carter, I am afraid that Jackie cannot come up to your house. He is playing with the little Fenn boy. Good afternoon!"

Edith turned to her husband. "I guess you're right, John. But I'm going to stand by the Fenns no matter who turns away from them—or from me!"
