Get Rick-Quick Germans Dispose of War Souvenirs to American Soldiers.

(By Associated Press)
WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, Jan. 28.—In the Coblenz newspapers today the Burgomaster appeals to the self-respect of the Germans to refrain from commercializing Iron Crosses and other German decorations of war.

The American intelligence officers have discovered several instances where shopkeepers near Coblenz sold Iron Cross watch fobs with a miniature American flag pinned to the ribbons. This fact resulted in the arrest of several Germans, who were sentenced to jail.

Circus is Coming.
The Burgomasters of both Treves and Coblenz notify the civilians in today's newspapers that the use of the American colors for commercial purposes must cease. They warned the Germans that if there is an infraction of American orders in this respect they must suffer the consequences.

The Americans in the occupied zone are to be given an opportunity to see Hagenback's trained animals on a war basis. Before the war Hagenback had more than 800 animals, but these have been reduced in number during the war, so that when the circus arrived in Coblenz it had only 100 specimens. Carl Hagenback is with the circus. The first performance will be given Feb. 1.

British Viewpoint on Matters Affecting England and America

By VICTOR McNAUGHT.
LONDON, Jan. 25 (Special Correspondence).—Without a doubt the greatest issue of the present conference and negotiations has to do with the relations of the United States and Great Britain.

What shall be the attitude of each to the other? If they stand together, the peace and security of the world seems assured. If they do not choose to agree on vital matters, such as the freedom of the seas, a league of nations, and reduction of armaments, the governments and peoples of the two countries will remain friends without question, but the security of world-peace will be by many degrees less certain.

Sir John Foster Fraser, a British journalist, who has lectured much in the United States and who knows our country about as well as he knows his own, has given me what may be regarded as the typical British viewpoint on matters affecting the two countries. My talk with him ran through two or three hours, and my quotations from his remarks, while perhaps not given verbatim and in the exact order of utterance, will represent his views fairly.

SIR FRASER'S VIEWS.
"What do you think will be the attitude of the allied statesmen toward President Wilson when they come to actual grips?" was one question. "I think," replied Sir John, "that Messrs. Lloyd George and Clemenceau and Orlando will tell Mr. Wilson what they, as representatives of the allies, have already agreed upon as the plans and principles that are best for their nations. President Wilson will, of course, have the fullest opportunity, if he disagrees with any of their views, to state his reasons and to endeavor to persuade them to his way of thinking."

"Then you think the allied premiers will have agreed in advance to the peace terms they want?"
"I think it very likely; else what were the recent conferences in London for? You Americans must not forget," continued Sir John, "that technically your country was not and is not one of the allies. President Wilson has been very careful to state more than once that the United States was only associated with the allies in making war on Germany. You entered the war because Germany insulted your national pride. But President Wilson has been very careful to keep your nation in an independent position. We do not blame him for that, but such is the fact. The United States is free to do anything it likes in the matter of concluding peace. If it does not like the kind of peace the allies want, it can make peace on its own account. That seems a bold way of putting it, yet that is so in strict fact though I have not the slightest doubt America and the allies will see eye to eye."

"Do not mistake me. I believe that matters at issue will be handled in such masterly fashion that there will be complete accord between your peace delegates and those of the allies. President Wilson is a great man and an able man, and we expect him to use his great abilities in such a way as to harmonize the ideals of the new world with the demands and requirements of the nations that have really suffered in the war. But England and France will not surrender anything they think essential just because President Wilson falls to agree."

In passing, it may be stated here that Americans in London and Paris who are watching the situation closely are of the opinion that Britain, France and Italy have a much different program than that suggested by the president's fourteen points, and very skillful diplomacy will be needed. Britain, for example, has no thought of modifying her practices at sea during war times, and probably will not listen to any proposal to reduce her naval armament. The recent overwhelming coalition success, and the election of a Republican House and Senate in America, have strengthened immeasurably in England an already strong determination to adhere to the old maritime policy. Never before has our British coalition, "Britannia Rules the Waves," with more enthusiasm than he does today.

AMERICANS ARE BOASTFUL.
I asked Sir John Foster Fraser whether he thought Americans boastful of their part in winning the war. He admitted that he did think so.

"As a Briton I am grateful for the splendid way the best Americans have generously recognized what Britain has done in the war, but," Sir John added, "I have many times sat in smoking compartments of Pullman cars and listened to what seemed to be representative Americans talking about the way their army 'turned the trick,' and won the war when it seemed lost. When I would sometimes join in the conversation and let it be known that I came from England, the first question invariably asked of me would be: 'Now don't you think our boys are WONDERFUL?' Not once did anyone think to pay a compliment to the British army or navy—that is in smoking compartments and three dollars a day hotels in the middle west."

"Let me make a prophecy. As you go about in England, I predict that when you enter conversation with an Englishman, his first thought will be to tell you of his admiration for American soldiers and sailors."

Sir John was right. The first Englishman I talked with expressed conviction that Americans had furnished the final punch that was needed to win. Never before have Americans been so kindly received and treated in England as they are today. It isn't necessary to wear a uniform to share in the good will.

COMMON FOLK ADORE WILSON.
President Wilson is literally adored by the common people. Ask the man in the street, the everyday man who has nothing to do with statecraft or large business affairs, what he thinks of our president, and he will answer in a tone and manner that would move to pride almost any of the president's courtiers.

Mr. Wilson has been unusually kind and gracious on the occasions of all his public appearances, and all his addresses have been tactful and of a nature not disposed to arouse antagonism. He is very much admired by the people. At home, nothing is ever said about the president's personal appearance, but over here, everyone says: "Ah, but your president is a fine looking man!"

We must realize, however, that the big issues are not to be settled by the men in the street, but so far as England is concerned, they will be handled by men who think as Sir John Fraser thinks. Britain will look out for herself; let no one doubt that for a minute. There is no desire to offend America, but British interests must and will stand first with Britons.
