- (g) Miss Mildred Nusbaum

In the next presidential election, 12,500,000 women, representing 25 states, will be entitled to cast their votes, while the influence of women in the party conventions may be a determining factor in the choice of candidates.

The states in which women hold political power will control 40 percent of the electoral college, 45 percent of the house of representatives, over one-half of the senate, and almost one-half of the party conventions.

The power of women in the 1920 presidential elections will be more than twice as great as it was in 1916.

The Penny club will meet Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Henry Vogel-song at her home, 324 South Ninth street. Wednesday will be the regular club lunch day and a full attendance is desired.

During the last few weeks, four new federated clubs have been added to the state federation membership. The Art Association of Logansport, organized in 1917, has been admitted. The Tourist club of Russellville, organized in 1918; the Fin de Siecle circle of Frankfort, organized in 1917; and the Home Reading club of Greenfield, organized during this last year. The report of these new clubs was made by Mrs. John E. Moore, state president of the federation of clubs.

The Alice Carey club will meet Thursday afternoon with Mrs. Martha Johnson at her home, 206 South Eleventh street. Mrs. Mary Price will give a paper on "Immigration."

In honor of the officers of the Legislative Council of Indiana Women a luncheon will be given in the Claypool Hotel Thursday, April 3. Delegates and visitors to the Woman's franchise League convention have been invited to attend the luncheon, which comes immediately at the close of the convention, and many are planning to remain. Mrs. F. Louis Slade of New York will be one of the visiting suffragists in attendance.

To find a suitable Indian name for a club of fourteen Indian girls representing ten different tribes is the problem confronting the Witchita, Kans., Y. W. C. A. The club has been organized to meet Sunday afternoon when the girls come together to read and sing, play cards and make tea together. They have been reading Van Dyke's short stories, also Kipling and Ralph Connor.

The Current Events club will meet tomorrow afternoon with Mrs. Jessie Orr at her home on Pearl street. Mrs. Louise Voss will give a paper on Van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man," and Mrs. Grace Driver will give a review of Martha Tarbell's book, "In the Master's Country."

Delegates to the state convention of the Woman's Franchise League will be called to order next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Claypool hotel in Indianapolis. Routine business, such as reading of the minutes, announcements and annual reports of officers, will follow. Mrs. Olive Beldon Lewis, formerly of Richmond, will speak at the afternoon meeting, when plans for 1919 and 1920 work will be discussed.

An important business meeting of the Ticknor club was held this afternoon with Mrs. J. M. Coate at her home in Reeveston. Officials for the coming year were elected and plans for the new program were discussed.

Housing girl workers is a problem in Honolulu just as it is in New York, Chicago, Washington or any large city in the United States, according to Miss Gertrude Gogin, girls' work secretary of the Y. W. C. A., who has just returned from the Hawaiian Islands.

As a result the waiting list for the Y. W. C. A. boarding house is a long one. The house accommodates forty girls and is always filled, mostly with American girls who go to the islands to accept commercial positions there, too. But the space is inadequate for the demand put upon it.

The National American Woman Suffrage Association will become the League of Women Voters following the national convention of the association in February, 1920, the new name having been selected in the jubilee convention in session at St. Louis. It is assumed by the association that the Federal amendment will have been passed by that time. The association, although retaining its old name for another year, is reorganizing into two distinct sections, one being composed of delegates from non-franchised states. Suffrage organizations in states now vote are expected to assume the new name at once.

HIGH CLUB TO GIVE PLAY TUESDAY NIGHT

The Pedestrian club of the High school will present "The Betty Wales Girls and Mr. Kidd," at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening in the High school auditorium. The organization gives a play each year and it is always looked forward to with pleasure by the student body. The public is invited. Tickets may be obtained at the door.

The Junior class of the High school will give its first party in the High school gymnasium Monday night.

The Girls' Athletic association will give a skate from 4 until 6 o'clock at the Coliseum Thursday afternoon.

The Freshman-Sophomore classes of the High school will give a skate at the Coliseum Friday night.

"United we stand, divided we fall," was used in a poem by George P. Morris, written about 1830. There may have been an earlier source. At a later date Daniel Webster used the line with great effect in one of his speeches on the preservation of the Union.

A Woman's Business

By Zoe Beckley

WORK AND THE MAN

When Nicoli had gone, Walt stood with his head pressed against the glass of his window, trying to think a way out of the labyrinth in which he and Janet were groping away from each other. His brain was numb; his head was in a fever. Life was playing cat-and-mouse with him and Janet. Humility, self-contempt, self-reproach brought him no relief. They were not sincere with him. He did not know wherein he had gone wrong; any more than he could see wherein Nicoli was at fault. There seemed no one to blame for the situation any more than for a storm at sea.

A knock on his door went unheeded. The door opened and he heard some one enter his room. It was Lucy, her face rosier from a quick walk from her studio across the square. Walt knew by the step it was she. He did not feel in the mood for explanations and would not have given any. But Lucy asked him no questions; there was no need for them. She followed her instinct and simply proposed work. Taking out some sketches from her portfolio she laid them on the table. With a few tactful words she got his mind to work, and off his tormenting dilemma. Only vaguely conscious of something wrong, so absorbed did he grow in his work that hours passed before he knew he had to get to the printers who were fully attended to. Then with the closing of Lucy's portfolio as she put in her sketches, came back the full weight of his trouble to Walt. It was as though Lucy and work were magic to banish troubles from his spirit. With their leaving would go their kindly protection. He dreaded being alone.

If only there were something he could do, no matter how hard, that would help solve Janet's problem! Over and over Walt groaned at the leaden weight so new to him—the consciousness of helplessness. He was not even aware that Lucy had not gone, as his thoughts flew back again to their brooding.

"Wait, I don't want to rush you too much with the book," Lucy said, studying him quietly. "But if you are in the mood for it, I'd like to talk over the next two or three pictures for your book. Would you care to have a chop with me up at the studio and talk it over?"

Work! As though it had the healer's touch, the thought of it came like balm to him.

"Yes, yes, indeed, Lucy. I want to plug at that book just as hard as I can; as hard as you are willing to do it!" he cried gratefully.

"Then you'll have to keep at it pretty steadily, Walt," Lucy said. "Because I'm in a perfect stew to get that book done and another one started. I've known nothing for years and years so blessed to me as this work we are doing."

"That's the way I feel about it, too, Lucy!" Walt said earnestly.

They went out shopping for chops, salad and little cakes for their dinner, talking all the time of nothing but the work they had in common. Lucy did this from choice; Walt cut of instinct for self-preservation from the canker of brooding.

They cooked and ate their dinner together in Lucy's studio, never ceasing to speak of their work. Lucy always struck sparks from Walt's mind and he, in turn, fed her imagination. They outlined the rest of Walt's book; and accumulated themes for a new one. And they sketched out rough ideas for Lucy's illustrations.

When late that evening, Lucy showed signs of physical tiredness, Walt noticed it with a sort of tender gratitude for what she had done for him. Without her, that day would have been one of torment only. With her aid, it had borne fruit and made him forget.

Not for one instant did Lucy speak either of herself or of him aside from their work. So true had been her instinct, so sure her touch, that she reaped her reward, as she saw it, sooner than she had dared to hope.

Walt got up as soon as he realized that Lucy must be tired. He had gone to the door, and she had accompanied him, still talking of work, when suddenly, without warning either to himself or to her, Walt found himself with his arm about Lucy.

"You're a wonder and a dear! Good-night, little comrade!" he said, and kissed her.

A Mother's Happiness Made Perfect

Of Utmost Importance That She Have Every Care.

The expectant mother's physical comfort should be our first thought, and all about her should see to it that her preparation for baby's coming be completed. There is a most splendid remedy to prepare women for the greatest time in their lives, known as Mother's Friend. It is applied to the muscles of the abdomen, gently rubbed in, and at once penetrates to relieve strain on nerves, cords and ligaments. It makes the muscles so pliant that they expand easily when baby arrives; the hours at the time are fewer, and pain and danger at the crisis is naturally avoided. Mother's Friend enables the mother to preserve her health and strength, and she remains a pretty mother by having avoided discomfort and suffering which more often than otherwise accompanies such an occasion when nature is unaided. Every nerve, muscle and tendon is thoroughly lubricated. Discomfort during the period is counteracted, and the skin, after the crisis, is left smooth and natural. Write to the Bradford Regulator Company, Dept. B, Lamar Building, Atlanta, Georgia, for their Mother's Friend. Buy a bottle of Mother's Friend from the drug store today without fail.
