SEBORRHEA A HAIR SCOURGE

Seborrhea is the scourge that kills the hair. It propagates the dandruff bacilli and eventually causes baldness. If your hair is falling out, it is fighting for its life.

Nature fights to supply new hair, but with seborrhea in the sebaceous glands each succeeding hair is weaker.

Baldness keeps coming closer and closer—unless FAMO is used. FAMO destroys the dandruff bacilli. It ends all itching. FAMO causes the growth of new healthy hair.

It retards grayness—it contains no alcohol.

FAMO intensifies the natural color of the hair and adds a new luster and sheen.

Every member of the family should use FAMO regularly.

Even where the scalp is healthy, FAMO should be used as it will keep seborrhea away.

Also, it will make the hair soft and fluffy. Its use is a daily habit you will enjoy.

FAMO comes in two sizes—a small size at 35 cents and a big bottle at $1. Your money will be returned if you are not satisfied.

Seborrhea is the medical name for a morbidly increased flow from the sebaceous glands of the scalp. The seborrheal secretion forms in scales or flakes and is commonly known as dandruff.

WASHINGTON

If you were the richest and most powerful man in the world you had been brought to a point of obligation by a clever and beautiful woman you had forbidden the door of your home, and who loved and loved by your only son, what would you do about it?

What John Burkett Ryder does it provides one of the most dramatic and intensely human in "The Lion and the Mouse" Vitagraph super-feature, which will be seen in the Washington theatre today and tomorrow.

Confronted in his library by girl and his son, as the girl, smilier triumph, starts to leave the house great man turns in his wrath he youth, and says this:

"You damned fool—go after her a girl like that loved me—"

Alice Joyce is Shirley Rose, the girl, in this screen adaptation of the famous stage success of the same name, written by the late C. S. Klein, and produced under the personal supervision of Albert A. M. president of Vitagraph, and her characterization is conceded one of the greatest screen triumphs. She is the part of the daughter of a judge, who issues an injunction to restrain the wrath of Ryder, and revenge forces him to trial for peachment. In his safe are his which will establish Rosemore's scene, and the plot centers about the girl's finally successful efforts to get into the safe and get hold of the letters.

Norma Talmadge will be seen at the Washington theatre on Friday Saturday in her latest Select Pic, "The Heart of Wotona," in which is presented by Joseph M. Schick. It is a story of a half Indian girl who has been wronged by the name of her lover, and Hardin, the agent in charge of the reservation, is accused of being Wotona's lover. Hardin is a love with Wotona but has kept it secret because he has never been in any encouragement. To protect Wotona, Hardin marries her. She is ousted from the tribe. Wotona learns that she loves Hardin and Tony, so with her father's forgiveness and a real man's love she is happy.

MURRAY

That the managements of husbands cannot be reduced to a written formula with the same accuracy as a race for doughnuts is the theme at which is developed a series of delightful comedy situations in "My Though Married." Enid Bennett's New Paramount photoplay which shown at the Murray theatre today.

That man is a ready victim to the green-eyed monster is brought out by the action of the story and the inclusion is that literary treatise on how to manage wives and husbands all must have been written by bachelors and old maids.

The original story is by Lois and Arthur Zellner and was written for the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan. Enid Bennett has been surrounded by a suitable cast, especially select by Director Fred Niblo.

NEWS NOTES FROM MOVIELAND

Robes of regal splendor, it is announced, are worn by Nazimova in her forthcoming production, "The Red Lantern," and this picture, taken during one of the scenes, proves that the announcement is correct at least as far as the splendor goes (there really is not much robe, it is mostly beads and fringe). Among her costumes is the heavy silk garb of the Goddess of the Red Lantern and the awe-inspiring habiliments of a Chinese warrior chief.

The warrior's costume, a robe of embroidered silk, with the head of a lion depending from the waist, is apparel worn only by those of the Chinese, who stand ready to give their lives for the race. The lion's head is the highest symbol of valor at arms.

In other scenes Nazimova wears the robes of the Goddess of the Red Lantern. According to the description given, the robes are of the heaviest Chinese silk, embroidered with a thousand designs. On her head Nazimova wears the symbolic head dress of the goddess, studded with peacock feathers and dozens of silk floss pompons, the whole held in place by a band of gold embroidery that circles the forehead and temples.

The new Nazimova production, it is promised, will outlive "Revelation," "Toys of Fate" and "Eye for Eye" in its spectacular features. But in bold relief against this background of pageantry is the story of Mahlee, more poignant, perhaps, than the tragedy of Cio Cio San in "Madame Butterfly," which moves forward to a climax when race and love conflict.

Besides playing Mahlee, Nazimova portrays the character of Blanche Sackwell, delicately reared English girl and a half sister to the Eurasian.

"The Red Lantern," which was produced upon a scale of unusual lavishness, is based on the novel of Chinese life by Edith Wherry.

A picture of little Andrew Franklin, a Michigan boy, whose rather disappeared some time ago, is to be shown at the moving picture theaters in New York, in the hope that the father will see it and be moved to go back home. It is thought that the man is in New York City, where he was seen on Broadway not long ago.
