Household Hints

MRS. MORTON

FOR THE MAIN COURSE.

Veal Croquettes—One cup cold cooked meat, finely chopped, two cups boiled rice (hot), two-thirds cup of stewed tomatoes, egg, one tablespoon minced parsley, one and one-half teaspoons pepper, egg, two tablespoons cold water, bread crumbs.

If a deep fat thermometer is used for the frying pan the required temperature is 30 degrees F.

Mix rice and meat together thoroughly. Add tomatoes, seasoning and beaten egg. Spread out on platter to cool. Shape into croquettes. Dip in beaten egg, diluted with cold water, then in bread crumbs. Fry in deep fat, hot enough to brown a piece of bread in forty seconds. Drain on brown paper and serve hot with tomato sauce.

French Chop Suey—Three quarter pound round steak, one-quarter pound fresh pork, cut in half inch cubes, three large onions, one-quarter can tomatoes, one-quarter box spaghetti, one-quarter sweet pepper, heaping tablespoonful rice, water, salt, celery salt. Fry onions (cut in cubes) in bacon fat, cook and blanch spaghetti, wash rice, cover meat well with water about quart, add rice and cook one hour in sautepan (just simmer), then add tomato, onions, celery, spaghetti and sweet pepper. Season with salt, pepper and paprika to suit taste.

Mock Duck—Take a thick flank steak, split open, season and stuff with good bread dressing. Wrap and tie up securely with cord in oblong shape so dressing cannot get out. Steam for about an hour and a half.

Take from kettle, brown in greased frying pan, remove cord and serve in meat dish in circle of small boiled then butter-browned potatoes, make a gravy of meat juice, thickened with flour.

Scalloped Potatoes and Ham—Use the boneless smoked ham for this. One thick slice or two thin ones is plenty for one family. Lay one slice of ham in bottom of baking dish. Cover with as many raw sliced potatoes as needed. Sprinkle chopped parsley and chopped onion on top.

Four enough milk over it to almost cover it. Bake slowly for about one hour until potatoes are done and have absorbed most of the milk. No salt is needed if ham is quite salty; otherwise a little salt, also add pepper to taste.

Salt Cod Dinner—Two pounds salt cod, six medium potatoes, three canned whole tomatoes, water, salt. Soak codfish several hours in cold water, changing once; boil potatoes, cut tomatoes in halves, drain, dredge with flour and saute in butterine.

Wipe off fish and broil until brown; serve on a hot platter in a border composed of alternate potatoes and tomatoes, with small bunches of cress placed at intervals; serve with drawn butter sauce.

Heart Home Problems

MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl fifteen years of age. I have a brother who is twelve years my senior. He will be married two years in November and they have a little boy thirteen months old.

I am writing to you for some advice for him. His wife is one of the kind that does not like to work. She spends his money as fast as he can make it. She also treats him very cruelly, calling him names I would not like to mention in this letter.

At times when they come out home she tries to pick fuses with my mother and me. She always tries to lie out of everything and is really not worthy of a good husband in my opinion. She has a very bad reputation which my brother did not know before he married her. He works very hard, but the more he makes the more she spends. Also, my mother has been very kind to her. She gave them all their bed clothing, dishes, fruit, and did the washing all for nothing and did all the sewing, and yet she calls my mother all kinds of names.

My brother was sick last spring and now that he isn't able to work so hard on account of his health, she is worse. Before he was sick she often used to go away, locking the door and staying away until dark, letting him get his own supper.

Don't you think he should get a divorce? If he did, would he have to pay alimony? He has been trying his best to please her, but in vain.

ANXIOUS BLUE EYES.
People who jump into marriage ought to take the consequences. Your brother should have waited until he knew your sister-in-law better. She could not have concealed her temperament if he had recognized signs of irritability; her spending money now should not be a surprise to him, because he had a chance to study her tendency by the use she made of her own money before marriage; and if she does not like to work, he had a chance to discover that before marriage, too. Her reputation is the outcome of her actions, he could have judged the kind of a girl she was by her method of dressing, her associates and such tests generally.

Unless your sister-in-law is such a bad woman that your brother thinks the child's character will be spoiled by her influence, he should continue to live with her and make the best of his mistake. He should be just about the money he gives her and allow her enough to spend more lavishly than he can afford.

In case of divorce he would probably have to pay her alimony, and he really should because she is the woman he chose for his wife, and if he is not able to live happily with her he should do the best to rectify the mistake he made by marrying her.

Do not be entirely unsympathetic in regard to your sister-in-law. You and your mother have done a great deal for her, of course. Do not be imposed upon by her, but see what love for her and an interest in her point of view will do toward making her a better wife and mother.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young girl of twenty and care very much for a young man of about the same age. He used to tell me he cared a lot for me, but lately he treats me very coolly. I know of nothing that I did that would make him treat me so. How can I regain his love?

BETTY.
The young man is growing tired of you. Do not try to regain his love. He will like you better if you let him go his way while you go yours. If he still asks to call, let him come occasionally, but not as often as he would like to. Never telephone him or invite him to do something.

The difficult words were stumbling blocks, but Aunt Moggie found a simple chemistry book, and after supper, night after night, she and Annie studied and drilled. Sometimes Annie worked alone, for her aunt got copying to do at home whenever she could eke out the general expense fund.

Annie's old longings were more or less absorbed in her passion to learn and to be successful in her new work. A sense of the girl's effort penetrated even the trade-hardened shell of old Simms. He found her useful. For all his absorption in business he managed to note her wholesome looks and manner, her modest dress, her devotion to duty without apparent excursions into flirtations and frivolities.

When Annie had been there two months he summoned Margaret Bailey to his private office. "That niece of yours is a good girl," he announced tersely. "I've had her pay raised to eight dollars so that two you've been taking off your wages and sticking onto hers is yours again. Now please take this letter to Haynes & Hawkins, Albany."

Annie never knew when her first raise came. She only noted that Aunt Moggie bought shoes for Jimmie that week and sent a big bag of flour round from the grocer's. When Annie protested that it was too much, she said she had earned a lot extra from her typing.

At the end of six months she got another raise. There was ten dollars in her envelope. She looked down at it with a happy smile, recalling that other time when she had first earned ten dollars for a week of her work. How different her work now! In her buoyancy there was almost a feeling of guilt. To get so much money for doing what was a joy and a delight! She was emerging! Getting her head at last a little above the ruck of things!

A CHANCE TO LIVE

BY JOE BECKLEY

LIFE GROWS BRIGHTER
She was tired, but the day ended at 5:30, which seemed to Annie the middle of the afternoon. Aunt Margaret went home with her for supper and to carry some odds and ends of her belongings to her new, cheap furnished room.

"Well, dearie, how did it go?"
"Oh, wonderful, Aunt Mog! I'll be friends with that terrible telephone in no time. And the bookkeeper's promised to let me address envelopes on the typewriter tomorrow. Soon I'll be making out bills—he said so. And then—stenography!"

After supper they practiced with the stenography. Aunt Margaret drilled Annie in the chemical terms used at the office and dictated some imaginary letters. It was slow of course, but she was surprised how well Annie did it, all things considered.

"She'll get on," Margaret told Mrs. Hargan later; she's twice as bright as I was at her age. In a year she'll be earning as much as she got at the factory—maybe more."

"I hope so," said Annie's mother; "eight dollars is terrible little to get along on, with things getting higher all the time. We're an awful burden on you, Margaret. I wish I could get strong again—or else die."

"Sh, Jennie, don't talk like that! Things are going to be better now. You'll see."

And she did see. Annie gathered strength, body and soul. Her appetite for work was avid. Like a flame, it licked up every scrap that came in its path. She mastered the "terrible" telewith her neat if slow typewriting, the rarity of her mistakes, her unflinching willingness to take on any task.

Her shorthand was painfully lag-
