Trained Seals Act To Be Murray Bill Feature

That local vaudeville devotees are appreciating the high standard of acts which have been booked at the Murray is evidenced by the nightly capacity houses despite the warm weather. According to the management there is to be no letup of the good things, in fact some of the biggest and best acts on the Keith circuit are underlined to appear at this popular playhouse. Headlining the bill to open Monday matinee for the rest half will be Fox and Ingram, long recognized as a standard two-day act. This is one of the classiest acts in vaudeville, and is made more interesting from the fact that Miss Ingram is a sister of Herbert Ingram, the late song-writer who has so many song successes to his credit. Another act of prominence will be Corset and Verdi, two men who play the violin and cello. Here is another act whose names have been out in the lights of all the big houses and from all reports they generally are compelled to beg their audiences to excuse them after exhausting their repertoire.

An unusual feature of this bill will be Picard's Seals, an animal act which is said to be decidedly out of the ordinary. The animals run loose about the stage and offer routine of tricks the same as their brother vaudevillians to the delight of adults as well as the children. Headlining the bill opening Thursday will be Francis and Hummel, a very clever pair who appeared here last New Year's week. This team has just completed a tour of the Orpheum circuit and are spending a vacation with relatives here in Richmond, and will be seen here before resuming their winter season. This act will be pleasantly remembered, and with their wide local acquaintance should prove an exceptional feature. The pictorial feature for the first half will be William Desmond in "Mits of Hell," while Madeline Traverser in "Rose of the West," a five-reel Fox production, will be the photoplay feature for the last half.
