

Heart and Beauty Problems

By Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl nineteen. About one year ago I met a young man about twenty. I went with him until this spring and then was engaged to him.

Some business called me away from home for a couple of months and when I came back he was married to a young girl just fifteen. I took it awfully to heart for I loved him. Now he tells me he was engaged to her before he was married to me and that just added one more pain to bear.

About a week ago he came to me and told me he was sorry, and that it was not his wife that he loved, but it was I.

In the meantime I have found another boy friend who says he loves me so much that he would like to drop him, would drive him from home. I love this boy but not as much as I did the other one.

Please advise me what to do. Should I forget about my married friend? Do you think he loved me?

YOURS TRULY,

Above all, do not marry your new friend who loves you so much and whom you love too, but not as much as the first. Remember that love cannot be forced. If you are honest with yourself I think you will find you are forcing yourself to love the second young man.

AN OLD FRIEND

"Well, I should be struck dead if it ain't Annie Hargan!" said the voice with a syllable or two of chuckle following.

Annie wheeled to look into the black eyes and florid face of her old friend, Rose Rothberg. Incredibly grown up, incredibly open of figure, but with the same wholesome friendliness of manner that made Annie like her years ago, when they were kids and Rosie vowed by the gods of her ancestors she would "keep a delicatessen and candy store" when she grew up, because "eating is something everyone's gotta do."

Annie grabbed both her pudgy hands and pumped them up and down delightedly.

"And what are you doing down here?" cried Rose, whose name was Rothberg no longer, but Mrs. Max Gubin. "I heard you was married and lived uptown in a swell flat--what a grand boy you got here. Annie--Oh, I could eat him, such a sugar-lump, hey--" And Rosie, her breath given out by her long mixed sentence, took a fresh one and chirruped to Robbie, snapping her fat fingers and smiling down close to his puzzled little face.

Annie, proud and pleased, tried to answer all the questions at once. "I did live uptown, Rose, but--" Annie hesitated to mention Bernie's loss of job, "well, things happened and--"

"Ach--trouble, we all got it!" cut in Rosie. "You should know the trouble we have! My Max four months in the hospital and the bustles smashed. Shub! And Rose wagged her head expressively.

"So your dream came out, too, did it, Rosie--the delicatessen shop?"

"Huh--yes, it came out--" Mrs. Gubin raised both shoulders and both palms outward, "but it didn't last. That's how dreams do. But," she paused, her head bent on one side, eyebrows lifted, mouth drawn down at the corners, "we try again. Downtown this time. It's best. Stick with the people you know. Uptown, where new friend and if you marry him you will spill your life. Just be friends now, and after while matters will adjust themselves. The right man will come along for you and the right girl for him.

Your first friend acted dishonorably. Do not waste your love on him, because he is not worthy of your loyalty. He had no right to be engaged to two girls at once, and he had no right to marry another girl when he was engaged to you. Something is radically wrong with his character and it was fortunate for you that he married some one else.

Do you admire him for going to you with his troubles? Don't you think that he ought to stand by his wife now that he is married? He has much to learn before he can rightly call himself a man.

Think about him if you want to, but think about him as he is and not wrapped in your ideals which made a man of him in your eyes. You will find happiness just as soon as you have the right attitude. Perhaps, however, you will have to free yourself from close relationship with the young man. Remember that love cannot be forced. If you are honest with yourself I think you will find you are forcing yourself to love the second young man.

was, it's all show and no pay. Downtown the people pay quick! When my Maxie gets well, this is where we stick!"

They exchanged sympathies and talked in a neighborly way of flats and families and the best shops to patronize and the best ways to keep the babies healthy, there being no parks nor playgrounds nor anything. And that reminded Annie of her errand.

"By the way, Rosie, is there a place around here where a man who likes athletic things can get a little recreation? Any gymnasium or anything?"

Rose considered; such things were not much in her line.

"There's the new baths," she offered. "You can go swimming there. Only in summer there's such a crowd waiting that they only leave you stay in the water fifteen minutes. Then you got to come out and let the next bunch go. It's all right in the spring, when it ain't so crowded. But in hot weather it's better to stay at home."

"I think there's some kind of a boys' club over in First avenue near Tenth. That's free, but I guess it wouldn't be much for a man. And there's a recreation pier at Twenty-third. There ain't anything else I know of, unless it might be the school in Twentieth street."

"My oldest boy goes there, and I heard him telling that they got a 'gym' fixed up downstairs and need some one to teach them stunts. Why wouldn't your husband teach the kids and then he could get the use of the place free, yeh?"

It was a canny idea, but on her way home Annie mused once more on the paucity of pleasures to which the poor had access. She told Bernie that night with all the show of triumph she could muster of the "things to do" she had learned of in the neighborhood. Bernie was not enthused. He had had a hard day and had taken cold standing outside for hours in the raw wind as his work obliged him to do.

"I feel punk, Ann," said he, "I'm going to bed."

Household Hints---By Mrs. Morton

TODAY'S BEST RECIPES

Veal Loaf—Two pounds of round steak, ground, one-half teaspoon each of salt and pepper, one pound pork, ground, two cups bread crumbs, two eggs, well beaten, one pint of water. Grind steak and pork, add the bread crumbs, salt, pepper and the two eggs well beaten. Add water. Put in loaf place in roaster, sprinkle salt and flour and bake in a moderate oven.

Dandelion Sauce—One-half cup of chopped dandelion leaves, one-half cup vinegar, one-half cup honey, one half teaspoon salt.

Add honey to vinegar, let it stand until dissolved, then pour over leaves, let simmer over slow fire for thirty minutes. Serve hot with any kind of roast meat.

Escalloped Tomatoes With Corn—Two cups tomatoes, two cups corn, one cup bread crumbs, one teaspoon salt, one-quarter teaspoon pepper, two tablespoons sugar, two tablespoons of butter. Cover bottom greased casserole with bread crumbs, then layer tomatoes, corn, salt, pepper, sugar and continue in layers till all used. Then sprinkle butter on top. Bake.

Slaw—Head of cabbage, one onion, three apples, celery to taste, one cup of vinegar, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon sugar, one-quarter teaspoon of pepper. Run cabbage, onions, apples and celery through slaw cutter, then salt, pepper and sugar. Heat vinegar in bacon grease and pour over all.

Butterscotch Pie—One cup sweet milk, one-half cup dark brown sugar, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, two eggs, vanilla extract. Put in double boiler milk, sugar and butter, let come to boil, then add yolks of eggs well beaten to same. Make thickening of flour and milk, put in same, let get thick, flavor with vanilla. Pour in ready baked crust, make an icing of whites and put in quick oven to brown. This makes one pie. Icing will get stiff quicker by adding a little salt.

Leftover Coffee—Some morning save the leftover coffee. Dissolve gelatin and add the coffee and sugar to it and you will have a good luncheon or dinner dessert.

New Method of Making French-Fried Potatoes—Cut large cold boiled potatoes into cubes as for French-fried potatoes and dust lightly with flour and brown quickly in hot fat. This method prevents the potato from being soggy in the center.

Revulsion Against "Dry" Law is Seen by Brewers

(By Associated Press)

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 3.—Believing that a revulsion of feeling against prohibition can be concentrated for a repeal of the liquor statutes, the brewers of the nation have called big conferences here for Sept. 28. The meeting will last a week.

Arrangements for the sessions, which promise to be the largest and most important in the history of the industry were completed by Hugh F. Fox, of New York, secretary of the United States Brewers Association.

BUY CANNED FOOD TO BREAK H. C. L. EXPERT'S ADVICE

If Richmond housewives as a whole would call a halt on fresh vegetables and fruits and buy canned stuff exclusively for even a few days prices could be brought down in the opinion of a Richmond woman who has had a notable amount of training and experience as a professional and home buyer.

"Canned fruits and vegetables are lower in price than fresh ones, we all know that," she said. "It is evident that this is not a natural condition. Cooking or other preparation and the can itself have added to the expense of the canned food, but in most cases it has remained at a fairly reasonable price.

Fresh Goods Much Higher

"In the meantime fresh goods no larger and no better in food value than the canned, and with only the picking to add to their expense have soared and soared until housewives who are buying them are paying a price which should by all means be run down. "Take tomatoes, for instance. Are't the housewives of Richmond able to buy a can of tomatoes with more tomatoes in it for less than the price of fresh tomatoes by the pound? They are! Only a trip to grocery and inquiry of prices will convince the cook of this. The same is true of almost any other vegetables and a good many fruits.

I would be heartily in favor of Richmond women taking this strain and giving the method a good try-out. If prices do not come down in a few days I would advise them to keep up the good work, and I'll bet on the result of two or three weeks."
