McComb Emphasizes Work of Constitution Classes in H. S. Vocational Arts

The work of H. G. McComb, the new school superintendent, vocational training, is not only limited to strictly vocational arts, takes in continuation classes which are advanced courses. About one-third of McComb's time is spent in industrial and household arts, while the remaining two-thirds is given over to the continuation classes. The parents of children in the local high school are under the impression that, if a pupil, takes up a vocational subject he is preparing to learn a trade.

"That is not the case, said McComb, 'for that reason we are having continuation classes, which, of course depend on the type of work the pupil is taking.'"

"He laid emphasis on the fact that the type of work to be done in the vocational training course is in household and industrial arts."

"We want to introduce the pupils to such materials as wood, steel, iron, etc., for the boys. Textiles, foodstuffs and other similar articles for the girls, in such a way that they will become acquainted with the changes necessary in production. Our aim is to make everybody an intelligent consumer," concluded McComb.

$4.65 HY ART The National Economy Petticoat

The models pictured above represent our September arrivals of $4.65 HY ART Petticoats just received. They have the indispensable "Justo Top" which makes them fit and hang perfectly. Never too tight or too loose.

They are made of beautiful soft Taffeta Silk of splendid quality, and are the equal of petticoats selling at higher prices.

This economy is the result of our co-operation with many of the largest stores in the country, one in each city, to the extent of arranging to take the HY ART factories' entire output one year in advance.

In this way the HY ART factories are assured of large production on only two styles each month throughout the year without any dull seasons, and wholesale selling expenses are done away with.

All of which savings can be quickly seen in the universal, nation wide price ..... $4.65
