

Heart and Beauty Problems

By Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson

Dear Mrs. Thompson: What is your opinion on the "Mother Love" question?

Oh, mothers! women! why don't you give your children more love which they are so hungry for?

I am only a girl in the early teens but how often have I wanted to go to my mother with my little school troubles and small troubles that come in the life of every girl and boy. Girls and even boys are hungry for mother love. I know very well that mother loves me as all mothers love their children, but they are not their friends as they should be.

Many girls marry young, thinking they will receive this love from their husbands, but alas, this love must come from their mothers first.

How often I have wanted to tell mother things, but I would almost rather go to my teacher (even if he is a man) and tell him my small everyday troubles in and out of school.

Mothers, please be a friend to your daughters and sons also.

JUST A GIRL.

We are living in a transition period at present. The woman of yesterday, who stayed at home and thought of little outside, is giving her place to the woman of today who is no longer to shift her responsibilities in the outside world to her husband. Naturally as woman is developing into a new being she loses her close touch with the older generation.

I believe the lack of understanding between you and your mother comes from the fact that you do not believe she will understand your problems. This may be quite true. There are a few fortunate women of the older generation who have the faculty of keeping astride with the times to the extent that there is a close bond between them and their children. The children with such mothers are indeed fortunate.

Do not be afraid to tell your mother the things you long to. I believe she will understand better than you think she will. This longing is at least teaching you a lesson because it will make you more sympathetic with your own children when you have them.

She Married an Average Man

BY ZOE BECKLEY

We had more fun today, Athena and I, buying things for Katie's trousseau. I've almost forgotten that Katie was Athena's housemaid till a few answerable arguments, her son Gerald's enthusiasm and Katie's own firm refusal not to have the wedding until Gerald had made good in his new job for at least a week.

Meantime Katie has graduated from her cap and apron and is stopping with her aunt in Brooklyn until her clothes are ready and she has found a tiny flat. I really am impressed with the refinement Katie has shown in selecting her things. And she has a little chest of linens and odds and ends of finery "from the old country" that her aunt and cousins have given her and that she has bought from time to time with her savings.

There is no cheap lace and Hamburg embroidery that you could stick your fist through in Katie's collection. And she returned three sets of the crepe de chine "pretties" Athena sent her from a Fifth Avenue shop, saying she would keep only one set for the wedding outfit, but "mustn't get used to silk underwear till Gerald could afford to buy it for her."

Despite all this, I still have shivers whenever I remember that Katie is, or was a menial working for wages in her mother-in-law's house.

"You're the worst little snob I've come across in years," Athena scolded me. "You don't call a woman a menial when she cooks and sweeps and takes care of babies and washes the clothes in her own household, but only when she does it in somebody else's for money! You don't remember that both is an accident, and that nobody is any better than anybody else simply because they've had more advantages. It's what you do with your advantages—or without them—that makes you 'better.'"

"Wouldn't you be more pleased if Gerald were marrying a girl in your own circle?" I persisted, still unable to swallow that housemaid idea without choking.

"Not unless she stimulated my Gerald to success as Katie is doing," retorted Athena, firmly. "And not unless I liked her personality and her ambitions and her attitude toward others. Most girls in my circle, as you call it, have been educated into the worst kind of snobbishness—the kind that values you for what you have, not for what you are or what you do."

"Will you have Katie and Katie's aunt, the plasterer's wife, at your dinners and luncheons and dances?" I asked.

"I'd just as leave have them if they cared to come," insisted Athena. "I dare say they'd be highly interested and possibly amused, at Mrs. Van Horne and her two highbrow but impossible daughters. And the Van Hornes could learn something from Mrs. Harrigan, I'll bet my Doucet gown! But Mrs. Harrigan wouldn't care to come. Not that she considers herself and her hard-working 'old man' a whit inferior, but because she would feel out of her element. She and Mrs. Van Horne would have few mutual topics of conversation."

"Have you ever considered, Athena, dear, that your friends will cut Katie, and possibly you, after her marriage to Gerald?"

"Fiddlesticks! I can spare anybody who cuts me. I'm not the sort of woman who is dependent on other people for her enjoyment in life. You won't cut me, will you, little redheaded snoblet?"

"No, dear," I answered, giving her a bear-hug. "You're the best woman on earth, Athena. The worst part of our going to live in Hammond's Corners is leaving you. Jim says we're to go next week."

Earlham Notes

Mrs. Harlow Lindley, wife of Prof. Lindley head of the history department at Earlham, has issued invitations for an informal reception-tee in honor of the senior girls and several brides-to-be of the class of 1920 at her home on College Avenue next Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock.

Thirty-six members of this year's class and two graduate students, Mrs. Anna Doan Stevens and Mrs. Knight, have been invited.

Students at the college gathered for an all-college social Saturday evening. Earlham is making plans for the fifth annual Indiana Student Volunteer convention to be held there Feb. 13, 14, 15 when 300 students from all the colleges and universities of the state will be present. Conferees will be housed in Earlham and Bundy dormitories, according to the arrangements announced by Milton Hadley, a member of the state executive committee and Esther Rhoads, students in charge of arrangements.

BRIDE OF FAMOUS BELGIAN PLAYWRIGHT IS MAKING MANY FRIENDS DURING U. S. VISIT

Mme. Maurice Maeterlinck's most recent picture.

The young wife of Maurice Maeterlinck, famous Belgian playwright now in this country, is making many friends because of her dainty manner and delightful personality. Maeterlinck himself is finding the way very rough. The lecture tour arranged in advance for him, has been cancelled. Maeterlinck has addressed several social gatherings and is contemplating a tour of his own choosing.

but the work may be begun this year. "The showing made by the parish last year was very gratifying to the pastors and the congregation, being in many respects the best in the history of the church," said the Rev. Roell, Monday. Reindeer were first imported to Alaska 28 years ago.

St. Andrew's Church Has 2,200 Members; Showing Best in Years, Report

The Rev. Frank A. Roell, pastor of St. Andrew's church, read his twenty-first annual report to the congregation Sunday. It showed the receipts from ordinary sources to have been $9,500. From other sources, $6,500 was received. $1,700 was collected for home charities and foreign missions, the total receipts being about $17,500.

Approximately $3,000 was paid for salaries of pastor, teachers and organist. $4,300 was applied on the school debt and $2,000 set aside for the fund being created for renovating and redecorating the church, which now amounts to $7,000. Current expenses and repairs totalled nearly $5,000, leaving a balance of about $2,000 in the treasury.

The total membership is more than 2,200. There were 19 baptisms, 19 marriages, 40 deaths, and the parish school is attended by 406 children. In the past year a business course was added to the curriculum of the high school, and a boys' choir organized, both ventures proving very satisfactory.

The annual election of trustees was held at the congregational meeting, and resulted in the choice of Rudolph J. Behringer, Howard B. Geier, Ferd Grothaus, Joseph Hoch, Henry Hursting, and Joseph Stolle.

The time for beginning the extensive improvements on the interior of the church has not been definitely set,
