

The Diary of an Engaged Girl

By Phyllis Phillips

June 4.—It must be that I was born all different from most girls, at least, and his love. Of course, there was a grain of truth in it, but, oh, that foolish-faced clown!

The other time that George was sentimental with me was when we were tearing up one of those Connecticut roads together last spring. There was a pretty stiff wind blowing, and he suddenly thrust his face into mine—this at a moment when we were tearing off eighty miles an hour—his collar burst open and gave me such a start that again I roared with merriment. No, George and I were evidently never intended for each other. But we did enjoy that race to the lake at Seventy-second street this morning, in spite of Aunt Harriet.

The worst of it all was that as we were running and pretty well neck-and-neck at that, for I am a good runner, I stumbled and fell right into the outraged stomach of a portly female, whose scream of protest brought me from my most undignified position to realization that I had almost knocked my own Aunt Harriet down.

To make matters worse, George rescued me from the hem of her quivering coat, and braced me with his good old arm. Aunt Harriet snorted, then rubbed my smarting cheek, and asked me with a melting glance of welcome in George's direction if this were my Jack!

I draw the curtain on the scene that followed. Her expression was wonderful to behold. Aunt Harriet has thin lips and a beaky nose. She is spare and acrid. 'Nuff said.

Heart and Beauty Problems

By Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson

Dear Mrs. Thompson: In reply to Fortuna I must say I believe something has come over the people, which is similar to the confusion of tongues when they were building the tower of Babel. It seems like there is no one who can understand any one else in the whole world, not even their companion, and I sometimes feel like not even their own Father or Mother, or their own children.

It seems to me that no one understands me. I want to be a good woman and would like to have friends and be a friend to everyone, I even have several enemies, who will not even look at me, that I really love and would just love to have them as friends and would just do anything for them to hold their friendship, and have time and time again, but they treat me as if I were a rattle-snake, it seems to me often I have not a real friend in the world. I often get so discouraged I wish I were dead. Often my husband gets so mad at me and we have a fuss. He tells me things that hurts me so I can hardly endure it and I have come to the conclusion it is all because we do not understand each other, and I believe it is a curse placed upon us for our sins, if we could only see it in that way.

I have worried over this until I am almost a nervous wreck, and often when there is a misunderstanding with myself and some one, I cry and worry until I am almost sick, and worse than sickness of any kind have ever gone through, but it doesn't help it one bit. Can you give me any idea other than my own what the trouble might be?

Worried Lou.

Dear "Worried Lou"—You say no one understands you. I don't believe it. If you are natural and sweet tempered, people will understand you all right. And if some people do not why worry about them, for they're probably not worth your worry. Perhaps you are nervous and "peculiar" with your friends and family. People are so busy in this world they don't have time to stop to understand people are this way, and what might seem to be dislike is often just an outgrowth of the busy life they must lead.

If you seem nervous and run down you might see a physician or buy a good tonic—there are several on the market—but better still try with all your might to be happy despite other people. If you have money, help some less fortunate, that is bound to make you happy. If you do not have money to spend in this way help them with cheerfulness, encouragement, and above all, smiles. They're worth so much. I dare say that if you make it a point to see the funny side in things that come your way, even if they are annoying, that you will notice a difference in your life in only a few days.

"Worried Lou," when you think of the starving Armenians, of the people who are entirely alone in the world without even families" who do not

IMOGENE.

Not so frequent in usage but none the less lovely and possessing a good deal of poetic charm is Imogene. The name has no definite history and etymologists find it difficult to account for it, but the generally accepted theory is that it is another form of the imaginary which is found in Germany in early times.

There was an Imagene of Limburg in 1400 and various other instances of the use of the name by German women. How England secured the name of Imogene is open to speculation. It is probable that Shakespeare's heroine established her vogue there, though etymologists contend that it was used by British ladies before the master playwright wrote his version of the old story of the deserted and betrayed wife, which he so strangely placed at the court of the last independent British prince.

At any rate, Shakespeare called his heroine Imogene, thus establishing her vogue forever. The name is still a great favorite in England, but has widespread popularity here, due, perhaps, to its rather poetic associations. Also it usually degenerates into Gene.

A few devoted admirers of Shakespeare (and others unwittingly) give the name to girl babies in baptism, probably ignorant of the fact that as Imogene, the name was once bestowed on a daughter of Emperor Pandrus of Greece and the wife of Brutus, according to Geoffrey of Monmouth. She was mentioned in Anne of Brittany's funeral oration in 1514.

Imogene's talismanic stone is the jacinth. It is said to protect her from danger, especially of lightning. Worn when traveling, it will insure her a happy, successful journey. Wednesday is her lucky day and 6 her lucky number.

What's in a Name

(Copyright)

SADIE.

The quaint name of Sadie, lately split Sadie, has its origin with Sarah. It comes from a Hebrew verb meaning to fight or rule, and hence came to signify "princess." The first record of the use of Sarah or Sara belongs to Biblical history where the wife of Abraham was so called.

Sadie came into existence through the Irish names one cares to believe that she is only an Americanization of one of Sarah's many diminutives. But for the sake of etymological exactness, it is nicer to believe that the Irish Dabhdh was the real forerunner of Sadie.

But between the time of Abraham's wife and the Irish version of her name, Sarah had been adopted by other countries, and had won great popularity. In England Sara Beauchamp gave it vogue in the reign of Edward I and Sarotta de Moulton, who lived in a former reign, was also supposed to possess a name which was another and favorite form of Sarah.

The French preferred Sara without the "h" and it still continues in great vogue there. They have another form, Sarotte, which is also popular. Ireland's Sadhbh and America's Sadie are apparently the only other existing forms.

Sadie has a curious talismanic room—malachite. If it is encrusted with the fangs of the sun, it will bring her peace, freedom from danger and disease, and sound sleep. It is particularly lucky for children, and it is said that a piece of malachite tied to a child's cradle will protect it from dangers throughout later life. Saturday

Sh! Don't read this to your husband!

But—

This is the only country in the world—

Where a man takes off his shoes and creeps upstairs, when he comes in late evenings—

Where the man pushes the baby carriage.

Where a man says: "I'll see what my wife says about it;" before accepting anything from a dinner invitation to a job.

Where a man actually brags that his wife "made him," and boasts of how skillfully and cleverly she "runs him."

Where a man whimsically refers to his wife as his "Bettie ninety-nine per cent;" "The Boss," or "The Head of the House."

Where a man's success is measured chiefly by his wife's clothes.

Where a man can get out of doing anything on earth he doesn't want to do—by using his wife as an alibi.

Where a man keeps his money and his religion in his wife's name.

Where a man will cheerfully marry a peniless girl, who doesn't know how to boil water or fry an egg—and let her practice on him.

Where a man permits a woman to choose his friends, his cravats, his pastimes, the house in which he shall live, the schools to which his children shall go, and the place where he shall lie after it is all over.

Where little girls are brought up to expect boys to wait on them and FOR them; and little boys are brought up to be pals and comrades to girls, instead of overlords.

Where a man who has settled down for a quiet evening, will get up, put on his hat, coat and shoes, and go out for a spool of thread.

Where a man looks upon every woman as a "lady" until she proves herself otherwise, and regards every young girl as a "little sister," to be protected and respected.

Where a man will let a woman tell him what she thinks of him, and accept her anthology of his little failings with a good-natured grin, a kiss, or a wink.

Where laurels are considered as becoming to a woman as orange-blossoms, and a girl can be a "success," without wearing a platinum wedding ring.

MOST PEOPLE NEED SPRING
BUILDER NOW

Sickness Has Been General and Thousands Are Run Down—Vola-Tonic Ideal Spring Medicine.

Nearly everybody needs a strengthening, health-building spring tonic this year.

Influenza came back in January and February and thousands of men and women who had it are weakened and run down as a result. In addition, what appeared to be a wave of general sickness passed over the country the last part of February and the first part of March. Complaints were common during that period. Bad colds, la grippe and other forms of weakening sickness were reported everywhere.

As a result of all these things thousands of men and women are weakened and run down and it is believed that the need of a strengthening, health-building spring tonic is more general this year than ever before in history.

Vola-Tonic, "Builder Of Strength," is already being taken as a spring tonic by many people and is what thousands of other men and women need.

Vola-Tonic invigorates the entire system and is a wonderful strength-builder. Vola-Tonic starts its work by bringing a warm, healthy appetite and putting the digestive organs and bowels in good condition. It helps the stomach take strengthening nutrition from food to build up and enrich the blood and to nourish the organs and tissues of the body. Vola-Tonic also soothes the nerves and permits sound, energy-restoring sleep every night. As a result, full normal strength and health soon come to the weakened, run down man or woman.

People who are weak and run down from influenza, colds, la grippe or other sickness should take Vola-Tonic this spring so that they will be strong and well and ready to enjoy summer when it comes.

Vola-Tonic, "Builder Of Strength," is being specially introduced in Richmond by Quigley's five drug stores.—Advertisement.
