

CO-OPERATION ONLY WAY TO BRING DOWN HIGH COST OF LIVING

(By Associated Press)
CINCINNATI, O., April 10.—In the preliminary skirmishes of the threatened industrial war, "big business" has beaten its rival, the trades unions, Dr. Royal Meeker, commissioner of labor statistics of the department of labor, declared in an address today on the cost of living before the City Clubs, in which he urged co-operation as the most promising defensive weapon of the people in the struggle against high prices.

"By a carefully planned and lavishly financed campaign of misrepresentation," Dr. Meeker declared, "big business has succeeded in magnifying the defects and obscuring or discrediting the benefits of publicly controlled and managed enterprises."

People Are Fooled.
"The people have been bamboozled into relinquishing all effective control over distribution and prices of food and fuel and they have been made to appear to clamor for the return to private management of the railroads, the telegraph and telephone lines and the radio stations. Congress instead of formulating a progressive, constructive program to restore industries and especially agriculture to a stable peace time condition is pursuing the policy of 'scuttle' with most unhappy results."

Contrary to the popular belief, Dr. Meeker said, profiteering was result and not the cause of high prices. Increase of prices, he stated, was to be attributed to two causes: Doubling of the quantity of currency and decrease in the quantity of goods; the profiteer was the result of these conditions.

Co-operation Necessary.
Since the country, according to Dr. Meeker, possesses no comprehensive program for the reduction of the cost of living, the people "are turning to co-operation."

"While waiting for the government to formulate some constructive policies to encourage and speed up production, to reduce the enormous expenses of advertising, marketing and transportation of goods to control and equalize the distribution and the prices of commodities and if necessary to take over and operate the industries," Dr. Meeker declared, "the co-operation of workers and consumption promises larger results in the campaign to bring down high prices than any other thing."

Five Minutes with Our Presidents

By JAMES MORGAN

XII.—JAMES AND DOLLY MADISON

DOLLY MADISON

AS James Madison made a great name for himself before entering the Presidency and added nothing to it while in the White House, it must be that he was a good deal of a man but not much of a President.

Like all the more famous Virginians, Madison was not of the highest aristocracy, but the son of a plain, well-to-do farmer in an outlying county. His whole life was passed at Montpelier, the farm which his grandfather had wrested from the Indians; from it he drew his only private income and at last he was buried in its soil. He was dependent on his father until he was fifty, when the latter died and the place became his own, with one hundred slaves, who continued always to address him simply as "Master Jimmy."

Standing only five feet six and one-quarter inches, he was, with Grant, the smallest of our Presidents. Naturally thin and frail his zeal for study nearly wrecked his health while a student at Princeton College where for months at a time he slept only three hours out of the twenty-four. Unfitted for military duty when the Revolution came, he went to the Virginia Legislature instead. Yet this seemingly broken-down young man was destined to be the longest lived of all the Presidents, with the single exception of John Adams.

When a candidate for re-election to the Legislature, Madison revolted against the old Virginia custom of setting up the drinks. His morality was mistaken for stinginess and the thirty voters flocked to the capacious barrel of his opponent, who was elected. The defeated candidate had to wait a dozen years for his first chance to distinguish himself. Still no time was lost, for, while he was waiting, he diligently prepared to meet opportunity when it should come and made a close study of all governments, ancient and modern.

Although a shy, blushing little man, with a quiet little voice, which modestly sank almost to a whisper at the end of every sentence, by sheer force of his wide knowledge and sound judgment, he took first place at once in the immortal assembly of wise men which met to draft the Federal Constitution. Mere oratory counted for nothing in that convention, which was held behind locked doors, with no eagerness to applaud the orator and no reporters to play him up on the first page.

Madison himself was the only reporter present, but his report was not published until after he was dead and until all his colleagues had returned to dust. Each day unfailingly found that most illustrious member of the republican craft in his place, down in front of Washington, the presiding officer, where he made notes of the speeches in a shorthand of his own, which he laboriously wrote out in his room at night.

Having earned, by his constructive labors in framing it, the title of "Father of the Constitution," he took a leading part in putting the principles of the convention into practice. As a member of Congress, he was the first Congressman to rise and say, "Mr. Speaker!" He was the author of the first tariff and of the law creating the State, Treasury and War Departments, and he introduced the first ten amendments to the Constitution. With the rise of the parties, he took his stand by the side of Jefferson, who made him his Secretary of State and his heir to the Presidency.

If Madison had not been crossed and blessed in love, posterity might not catch him on his human side at all and only yawn over this prosy, serious, studious, cool-tempered, unaggressive, weakened, little great man. He was already a mature bachelor of thirty-two and a member of the Continental Congress, when a sixteen-year-old girl in his Philadelphia boarding house was the first to touch a soft spot in his heart. A young clergyman who had not caught him on his human side at all and only yawned over this prosy, serious, studious, cool-tempered, unaggressive, weakened, little great man. He was already a mature bachelor of thirty-two and a member of the Continental Congress, when a sixteen-year-old girl in his Philadelphia boarding house was the first to touch a soft spot in his heart.

Madison was past forty, and well into his Indian Summer, when he became involved in still another boarding house romance at Philadelphia. Only, instead of a lady boarder, he fell in love with a landlady's daughter, Dolly Payne Todd, who was only twenty-six, had lost her husband and was living with her mother, "who received into her house a few gentlemen boarders". Among these was Senator Aaron Burr of New York. Madison himself was staying at another house, where he and two other future Presidents, Jefferson and Monroe, were living three in a room.

There the fame of the pretty young Quakeress traveled to him, and he asked Burr—they were at Princeton together—to take him to see her. The match flamed up in the flash of an eye, and Dolly and her boy were borne away to Montpelier, where she proved her tactfulness and kindness by dwelling in peace under the same roof with her mother-in-law thirty-five years.

Aaron Burr stands charged with having parted several couples. The brilliant scamp must be credited with having united one of the happiest couples in the domestic annals of the Presidency.

Senate Recedes After It Adopts Volunteer Clause

WASHINGTON, April 10.—A respite was taken today by the senate in its fight over universal military training. Following adoption late yesterday of a plan for voluntary instead of compulsory training, the army reorganization went over until Monday with another spirited contest in prospect in an effort to strike out the voluntary system also. By agreement the senate session today, was devoted to eulogies of the late Senator Martin of Virginia, former Democratic leader.

Senator McKellar, Democrat, Tennessee, who led the opposition to the compulsory training features of the army bill, plans to call up on Monday his motion to strike out the voluntary system adopted yesterday by a vote of 46 to 9. In event of defeat in that effort he said he will offer amendments limiting the number of youths who may be trained annually.

Bread at Last to Go Up, Says Eugene Quigg

Richmond will have to pay more for its daily bread, in the next 30 days, said Eugene Quigg, vice-president of Indiana bakers, Saturday.

Quigg says that Richmond bakers have been contemplating either to raise the price or to cut the size, since Jan. 1. The large amount of flour purchased at reasonable prices, enabled them to hold off the increase.

Instead of raising the price, Richmond bakers will cut the present 16 ounce loaf to a 12 ounce loaf and sell it for the same price, 10 cents, Quigg thinks. This cut will probably be made as soon as the necessary moulds and new wrappers are obtained.

How Gotham Plans To Build Homes On the Part Payment Plan

(By Associated Press)

NEW YORK, April 10.—Homes for 36,000 of New York's harassed tenants, to be sold without "down payments" on terms far below current rentals, will rise on municipally owned vacant lots, if a proposal now before the board of estimate is adopted by the city.

Edward P. Doyle, chairman of the budget committee of the real estate board of New York, who proposed the plan, was requested by the board of estimate yesterday to take it up with the mayor's committee on rent and profiteering. It was estimated that if the plan found favor there, it would receive city backing.

Mr. Doyle's plan calls for the formation of a $30,000,000 building loan association with which the city would co-operate by furnishing vacant lots on 50 years' lease. The city owns thousands of such lots, acquired in delinquent tax proceedings.

Details of Plan.
The association would issue $5,000,000 in prepaid stock which Mr. Doyle said real estate investors would readily buy, and $25,000,000 in installment stock which would be sold to prospective purchasers in blocks of 25 shares at $100 a share. The stock would be paid for at the rate of 50 cents per share per month, or $12.50 for the 25 shares.

The proceeds would be used to erect concrete houses to be sold for $2,500 each. The purchaser would pay six per cent on the amount to price in monthly installments of $12.50 which with his payments on his stock would bring his monthly outgo up to $25. To this would be added a 4 per cent payment to the city as rental for the lot, and an assessment for taxes. In twelve years, the dues paid on the stock would amount to $1,200, which with earnings credited to the stock would pay for the house. The purchaser could then at his leisure purchase the lot from the city.

NAILS! NOW IT'S NAILS IN WHICH THERE'S SHORTAGE

Perhaps it is because all of Richmond are boosters and not knockers, but nevertheless, there is a serious shortage of nails here. A visit to all Richmond hardware stores revealed this fact.

Dealers attribute the shortage to recent strikes in steel mills; to the railroads and congestion which prevents shipment here; and to the millions of kegs of nails held in storage by the government. Millions of kegs were also left in France.

Art and Crafts

By EMMA L. PETTA

An exhibit of importance displaying to advantage the work of a large group of the New York Society of Painters was opened informally in honor of the Methodist women's conference Saturday morning, and will be formally opened to the public Saturday afternoon in the public art gallery of the high school. From a standpoint of emotionalism, types and portraiture, the exhibit is the finest displayed here this season.

The exhibit is one of particular charm, inasmuch as several of the painters sent their best canvases. Undoubtedly "Inspiration" by Susan Ricker Knox will receive commendation. The canvases are poetical, bringing forth the delightfulness of babyhood. In the center of the canvas is a pink dimpled baby in the nude. Seated with her chubby legs crossed she appears to be more a thing to worship. Flanking the child are two straight candlesticks in which stand a yellow tapers. Behind the child is a large gold or bronze plate in line with which the infant's back curves slightly as she leans a bit forward. Back of the plate hangs a straight cloth.

On Fifth Avenue when the whole world was praising the work of the Red Cross nurses on the battle line hung the portrait, "The Last Letter," by Clara T. McChesney. Artists and other critics gave it great praise. It will be an historical canvas when the days of war are further away.

The central figure is a Red Cross nurse who is seated at a low table writing. In a hazy background and crowded out of the picture to the left is the imaginative outline of a cot, the conclusion being that a dying soldier is dictating his "Last Letter." An expression of supreme fortitude, pity and patience is painted into the nurse's face.

"October" by Cullen Yates is one of the most beautifully colored and altogether charming landscapes in the exhibit. Placed advantageously it not only describes the sparkling atmosphere of midfall, and its radiant foliage, but gives to the viewer a certain richness which it would otherwise lack. Delicate of touch and yet bold in coloring Mr. Yates has perfected a delightful picture.

Many people will study with interest Eliot Clark's imaginative "Cloud Drama," which as some one suggested is "really a cloud tragedy." E. Lambert Cooper's "Street in Delhi" is an interesting canvas illustrating the relentless heat of the tropic sun, and taking the viewer rapidly in to the center of a sluggish district of the city. The coloring in this picture is especially well done. Strong and hot it is at the same time delicately manipulated and rich.

Other pictures in the exhibit are extremely interesting. They will be commented upon later.

Governor Goodrich, who through Charles Liebhart, Indianapolis art dealer, purchased two of George Bakers' canvases in his recent exhibit here, said this week he was greatly pleased with the canvases.

A charming autumn scene by J. E. Bundy has been placed on exhibit in the Nicholson book shop store window.
