GARY HOLDS DOWN STEEL PRICES TO HELP CUT H. C. L.

NEW YORK, April 20.—Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, informed the stockholders at the annual meeting in Hoboken Monday that the corporation was holding down the prices of its products because of the high cost of living.

Referring to inquiries made by stockholders as to why in view of the great demand, the cost of production and prices received by other manufacturers, the prices of the corporation's products had not been raised above those fixed by agreement between the industrial board and steel manufacturers on March 21, 1919, he said:

"It seems to us the problem of high cost of living is of convincing importance. When the increasing tendency is to insist upon payment of unreasonable sums for every commodity and for every service, so that the vicious wheel of advancement seems to be ending, we think there is a moral obligation on the part of every one to use all reasonable efforts to check this carnival of greed and imposition, even at some sacrifice.

"There is a growing discrepancy between different individuals and interests. The man with a fixed income is more and more disadvantaged and he is helpless. He can not increase his income to meet the increased cost of living. Therefore, it should be the effort of all to establish and maintain a reasonable basis of prices, certainly to prevent further increases; otherwise the government, from the standpoint of protection of a part of the public, must interfere."

Keeps General Price Down.
The attitude of the corporation on prices, Mr. Gary added, "has had considerable influence in preventing increases in the general selling prices of steel, although some (manufacturers) have made them, due to their claim, to increased cost of manufacture."

"Moreover, it is believed that in view of all the conditions prevailing, the selling prices of most of the diversified products of the corporation, for the present, at least, are high enough, though it is pertinent to say that when the actual value of the properties and volume of business of the corporation are considered, the net return is at least moderate."

PROSPERITY RESPONSIBLE FOR BETTER LABOR CONDITIONS

(By Associated Press)
WASHINGTON, April 20.—Improved industrial conditions and a revival of business activities following the cancellation of government contracts last year, were responsible for the large increase in the volume of employment in March, 1920, as compared with March, 1919, according to a statement today of the Department of Labor.

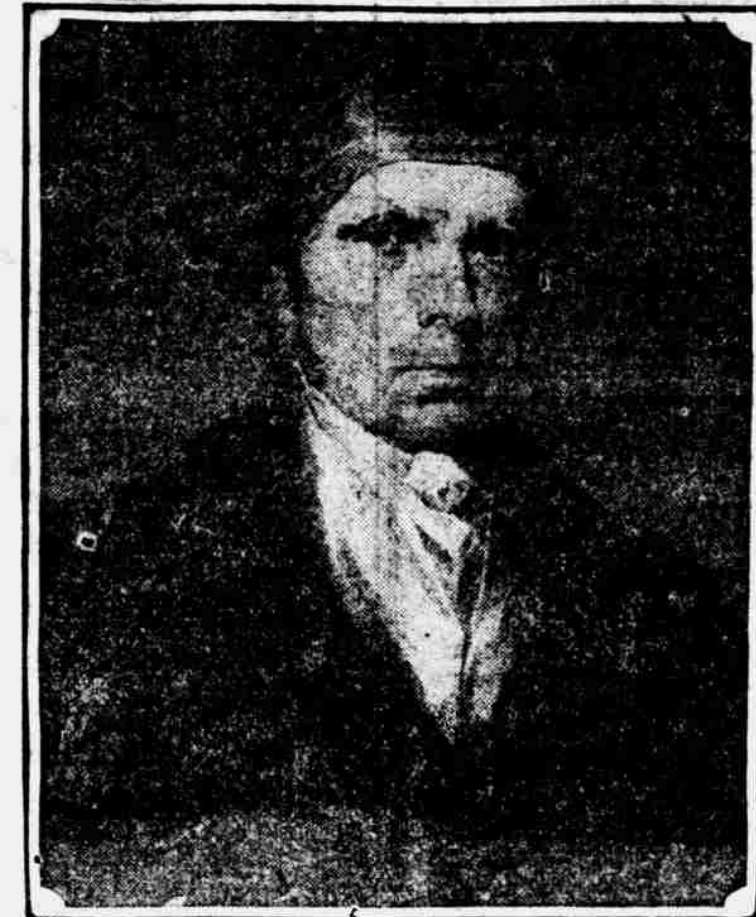

Greatest increases were shown in the woolen, men's ready made clothing, cotton finishing and automobile manufacturing industries.

By JAMES MORGAN

XIII.—A FUGITIVE FROM THE WHITE HOUSE

JAMES MADISON AT 82

BUT for the smiles of his blooming Dolly, Madison's administration would be a desert without an oasis, over whose dreary expanse the weary biographer would wander thirsting for human anecdote. Her bubbling spirits infused the austerity of Jeffersonian simplicity and won her a popularity that has been equaled, if at all, among the mistresses of the White House only by Mrs. Cleveland.

The regal Dolly dignified the opening of her reign by holding the first inaugural ball, where she radiated in a gown of buff velvet, with a Parisian turban and bird of Paradise plumes which had run the British blockade on its journey to her from Paris. Washington Irving, who was whirled from New York to another of her functions in "only 52 hours," as he said in amazement, has left us a picture of her as a "fine, portly, buxom dame," with a smile and a pleasant word for everybody. But "as to Jenny Madison—ah, poor Jenny! He is a withered little apple-ohn."

Unless Grant must be excepted, Madison is the only President who found the Presidency an anticlimax to his career. One of the really great law-givers of the Nation, he was without executive force, that is to say, without a knack for choosing other men and getting them to do his work.

With a weak Cabinet, this gentle, sweet tempered, peace loving scholar found himself adrift on the turbid sea of the great Napoleonic wars. Perhaps it was no longer possible to keep us out of war when at last the United States was the only neutral left in the civilized world. But certainly it was no time for a fair weather sailor.

After 20 years of kicking and cuffing from both sides in the European conflict, bullied by England and led to by Napoleon, the country was sore all over when the "warhawks" of Congress under the youthful Henry Clay, seized the tiller of the ship of state from Madison's irresolute hand and recklessly pointed the vessel straight into the teeth of the storm.

The seaboard East was more for peace and at that time the militant section was the new West, where the Tennesseans and Kentuckians, Indiana and Ohioans were lustily shouting "on to Canada!" Overborne by their rash counsels, Madison consented, as he said, to "throw forward the flag of the country, sure that the people would press onward and defend it."

Without competent civilian military leaders, without financial credit, without war equipment, the people could not press onward, as any history of the dismal war of 1812 will tell you. Even the capital was left undefended, and Madison, "in a little round hat with a big cockade" ran about in helpless bewilderment as the British marched upon Washington.

With the invaders entering at one side of the defenseless town, the President fled at the other. As he turned and saw the flames shooting up behind him, he flew the faster and the farther. While the British commander was blowing out candles on his dinner table that he might feast in the light of the burning White House, its fugitive master was hiding in a forest but 25 miles away.

After an absence of three days, a heavy-hearted, shattered, homeless President returned to view the charred walls of his official residence and of the Capitol. At every turn he was greeted by ugly mutterings of the general disposition to make him the scapegoat for all the National shortcomings in a war that had been thrust upon him. But with victory at New Orleans and the return to peace, the voice of the faultfinder was drowned in the hum of sudden prosperity. And in the closing days of his administration Madison was cheered by many assurances that his countrymen were not forgetful of the 40 years that he had served them in pure devotion.

Like John Adams, he emerged from his retirement to sit in the Constitutional Convention of his State, where the aged statesman closed his active public life, as he had opened it, with a sentiment of humanity for the slaves. His long service still was to be crowned by him in his 84th year, when South Carolina and her policy of nullification aroused the venerable father of the Constitution and drew from him a ringing challenge to the spirit of disunion. After his death there was found among his papers a solemn warning for his country to look upon the secret enemy of the Union as "the serpent creeping with his deadly wiles into paradise."

As with the other Virginia farmer Presidents, Madison was land poor, and the threat of poverty hung over his last years. After he was gone, Montpelier was swept away in the dissipations of his stepson, Mrs. Madison's only child, who betrayed his mother and left her without a roof of her own.

Returning to Washington, the widow passed her remaining years in a house belonging to a relative, and there, until Congress came to her relief by purchasing her husband's papers, she may sometime have suffered want in sight of the White House. Although so poor as to be glad to welcome an occasional market basket from her thoughtful neighbor, Daniel Webster, and to accept aid even from a former slave, she never lost the favor she won in her prosperity but continued to the end, like a dowager Queen, to draw about her a court of her own.

"The soviet was taking steps toward bettering education through the erection of about 10,000 schools, when I left the country," said Mr. Welch. "This action is a result of the recent opinion that ignorance does not make people better to rule. I do not know whether these schools are all public. Science will not hurt Russia; many people are finally coming to believe. I dare say more educational work is going on in Russia today than ever before in her history. This is an excellent sign. In Petrograd, which is the intellectual center of the country, a university of research, has been opened. Work which will be of value to the world is under way there."

The college men, merchants and others who see the fallacy in wars are decided against militaristic propaganda. Education for doing a great work among the people who have it, he thought, but pointed out that the old "step in time" education has taught mechanicalism. Younger Japanese are getting away from it.

"Japanes are not used to new things. Those who are delightfully polite in their homes will fight and scramble and act disgustingly on a street car. Unchagrined and content, Japanese will undress to the very last garment and put on night dresses on ordinary railway coaches. They have been trained to undress when they sleep, and place means nothing to them."
