Norma Talmadge in "She Loves and Lies"

Adapted by Grant Carpenter & Chester Withey from the Story by Wilkie Collins Direction Chester Withey

A truly splendid story so absorbing that it holds its suspense to the last inch of film. It boasts a supporting cast that for general strength and ability is seldom given a production. Conway Tearle has the leading male role, and the picture has been produced with such lavish splendor that you will remain enthralled from start to finish.

It is a picture punctuated here and there with deep emotion—al moments, in which Miss Talmadge plays in a dual role—a role that gives her the use of three distinct names. Her principal part is that of "Marie Callender," known on the stage as "Marie Max," who, for reasons peculiar to the play, poses as "June Daye," a Greenwich Village girl. These roles give Miss Talmadge unusual play for her versatility and the manner in which she rises to the task is more than gratifying.
