ANTI-FAT

Art thou stout and getting stouter? Stop repining—cease to moan; Hie thee to the nearest drug store—Ask for "Tablets Arbolone."

Arbolone will stop that craving. Make thee normal—that's well known. Thou'lt forget that hungry feeling After taking Arbolone.

And the pounds away will dwindle—Waist no longer like a zone; Thou'lt be thankful to the maker Of those Tablets Arbolone.

Note.—This little poem was written by a literary woman of Los Angeles, Calif., as a testimonial to Tablets Arbolone. It so aptly and truthfully describes the virtues of this well-known anti-fat that the proprietors use it for advertising. "End Of Road" Praised; To Be Shown 2 More Times

Several hundred men and boys attended the government film, "The End of the Road," which was shown for the first time in this city at the high school auditorium Tuesday night.

The film shows with fine tactfulness and excellent continuity the difference in the lives of those that have been taught the truths of life when they were children, and those that have been kept ignorant by parents with "false modesty."

No more effectual instrument could have been used by the government in its drive against venereal diseases than this seven-reel feature film. It will be shown again Wednesday night for men and boys, and Thursday night for women and girls. Parents are urged to come and bring their children. No admission is charged.

LOWDEN'S APPEAL

times it was a commission, sometimes it was a board, sometimes an individual, but whatever form it took, it was always an independent body. Of late years the commission has been the most popular form and the reasons are perfectly obvious because the commission affords a number of very attractive places for gentlemen who carry a county and are useful when conventions come. A place upon a commission, as the practice has grown up in this country, is desirable because it does not interfere with the private business of the gentlemen who hold the office.

Abolished Seatwarmers

"We decided after a survey of the situation that the wisest thing to do was just simply, by one act of the legislature, to abolish all of them. We found that all the functions discharged by those various groups fell into nine classes and so instead of those independent agencies we created nine departments of government and to each of those various boards or commissions, an independent official was assigned.

"The result at once was a genuine functioning of government."

The governor laid particular stress upon the department of finance.

"Among the departments that we formed was one known as the department of finance. A director was placed at the head of that, instead of a board or a commission. As a matter of fact, no board and no commission ever did administer successfully, either in private or public life. A body of men may be essential for legislative or quasi-legislative work, or for judicial or quasi-judicial work, but when it comes to administration, it is always the individuals, and not bodies of men, who do things.

"Now, this department of finance, therefore, had a director of finance at its head. He was given under the law two sets of powers. In the first place, he was charged with the general supervision of the finances of the state. Right here I want to disress long enough to say that in every private business that is successfully conducted, no matter how large it is, there is some one charged with the duty all of the while of seeing that that business lives within its income, and that unnecessary expenses are checked.

U. S. Has No Check.

"But in the government in this country—and what I am saying now applies to the federal government as well as it does to the state government—as a rule, every department of government is a spending department; that is to say, it is charged with this duty or the other, and it is not at all responsible for raising the revenue for that department. It is human nature for that official to exaggerate the importance of his peculiar sub-division of government all the while.

"There has been under our system of government nobody whose duty it was to check that tendency; in other words to look upon the other side of the balance sheet. That is why we created a department of finance, which was an entirely new department in our state government.

"The director of that department must approve of all vouchers for public moneys before they are paid; he must not only see that they come within the terms of the appropriation, that is simple enough, but he also has the power to criticize an expenditure even though it comes within the appropriation, if he believes for any reason it is not absolutely necessary.

Lowden declared that taxation played an important part in the high cost of living. He said:

"Today, there is not a problem of reconstruction or readjustment which is not properly related to this question of taxation. Take the high cost of living—the thing with which we are all familiar, most of us sadly familiar. While there are other more important contributing causes, perhaps, there isn't any doubt in the world but that the present rate of taxation has a lot to do with that increased cost.

out a scheme by which you could make one class of our citizens pay the taxes alone, but in practice these taxes are diffused throughout the community and the present rate of income and excess profit, in taxes, enter into the cost of everything that the consumer buys; there is no question about that. We all agree that the high cost of living is the most important factor in what we call "unrest," and therefore the question of taxation is related to that.

The whole future prosperity of our country is intimately related to this question of taxation. Not simply the men who employ others, but the men who work with their hands, are equally interested, because taxation is rapidly approaching the point where it is destroying initiative in business."
