STONE AGE

faith with which they supported him during the war. They have not "broken" the government, but they elected Asquith, who made an eloquent speech about cutting down prices and eliminating waste, permeated throughout with criticisms of the government.

Asquith is in—but he hasn't done anything but talk, and the price of bread has gone up.

That promise about trying the German war criminals is still a sore point. They like to bring it up periodically in parliament just to bother the government.

Don't Believe in Trial.
Nobody believes they will ever try any of the Germans, and they declare Lloyd George promised it to win the election, just as Wilson based his campaign on the "kept us out of war" slogan.

The Irish question has grown so difficult that there is an attitude of "Go Sinn Fein and Be Damned" with most Englishmen. England's military rule in Ireland is strongly criticized at home, and is blamed for the present condition of things.

The Irish press, especially since the Mountjoy jail affair, when the political prisoners went on hunger strike, has been openly denouncing Dublin Castle and all connected therewith, heading its articles on the Mountjoy prisoners "How Brave Men Endure" or sentiments to the effect.

Using U. S. As Weapon.

America is the weapon the Sinn Feiners are using against England—and with some effect. Interviews given to the Irish press declare that unless England settled the Irish situation satisfactorily, she will be at war with America within ten years.

Ireland has had, in the American senate, evidence of American support and she is making the most of that. An Englishman recently declared that the hatred of the Irish follows England wherever she goes; that the Irish, always skilled politicians, are arousing favor for themselves and against England in all parts of the world.

Would Support Us in War.
A Sinn Fein supporter living in London, told me recently that if there was ever a war between England and America Ireland would enter immediately on the side of the United States. Of course this person had no authority for the statement, but it shows the trend of ideas among the Irish.

There are too many ties between England and America to think of war.

but the fact that the possibility is discussed shows the unsettled state between nations.

English statesmen are almost painfully anxious to be on good terms with America and English people on the main, like the Yanks. Ireland forms the menace and I have delighted at tormenting its enemy, is making the most of the fact.
